And if this music is beyond their playing level, I have a Middle C version of this classical music, a long version similar to this one, but with some lettered notes to help beginners, and several very easy piano versions as well. Here is the first arrangement scroll down the page to see page 2 of the Canon, and the free PDF download links: Does your student know an inversion from a root chord? To play these arrangements easily, it is best if the student is already acquainted with chord inversions. Root position chords such as c-e-g become easy to spot after some experience, but when a C chord is "in disguise" such as the combination e-g-c or "scrambled," kids can find it quite baffling. In the beginning of the Canon, almost every RH right hand chord is an inversion with a different shape from the chord before it. What do I mean, look for patterns? It even works in the key of D version with the black notes. Here it is in its original key of D, but otherwise just the same as the C version. Assign them LESS than you believe they can do -- then it will seem do-able to them. Here is a similar arrangement, but for small hands! Scroll down the page for page 2, and the free PDF download link: Understanding chords means bigger-sounding music There are many arrangements of this piece out there on the web. I like these versions of mine because they allow a player whose reading and coordination are still pretty elementary to play a big-sounding piece of music. That is the value of knowing chords! They can be used like repeatable patterns. Every finger seems to need a brain of its own, because the hands and fingers move independently. In the meantime, playing a beautiful-sounding piece like this motivates them to keep pushing! Download Canon arrangement for small hands I recently had a question about measure 27 of this arrangement: So the left hand must let go of the note early, in time for the right hand to play it, despite the fact that the half note indicates the E should be held down for 2 beats. Invariably, listeners voted the Pachelbel Canon number one!
