1: CM Magazine: Carl, the Christmas Carp.

In Carl the Christmas Carp, Ian Krykorka writes a story drawn from his mother's childhood and from life in present day Prague as well. In the vibrant illustrations, Vladyana Krykorka lovingly recreates the city of her birth and her youth, down to the last glorious detail.

This Christmas was no different. The vendor fished it out of the container, weighed it and put it in the canvas bag they had brought with them. Radim and his father wished the man a merry Christmas and headed home with their prize. Radim joins his father in the selection process, and, when they come home, Radim is fascinated by the carp now swimming in his bathtub! He even nicknames the carp Carl after his uncle Carl! As Christmas approaches, Radim feels increasingly guilty about eating the carp! He even asks his mother if they could have chicken for Christmas dinner instead of Carl. She tells him that no one eats chicken at Christmas! Radim, however, cannot imagine eating Carl, and he enlists his friend Mila to help him free the carp in the Vltava River. Carl is afraid that his parents will be very angry with him for letting their Christmas dinner go! When he tells them the story, they try to find another fish, but it is too late. Ian Krykorka has created a picture book about Christmas traditions in Czechoslovakia. Although his prose is a bit predictable at times, Krykorka does tell an interesting tale. Since he has come to think of the fish as a friend and not a meal, Radim cannot bear to see it killed for Christmas dinner! The illustrations in watercolour and ink are glorious, vibrant and evocative of the city of Prague in the Christmas season. Snow covers the ground, trees are bare, and mist is rising from the ice on the Vltava River! The architecture and scenery of this ancient Czechoslovakian city also come to life in the illustrations. The illustrator, Vladyana Krykorka, who is also the mother of the writer, has given us a feeling of what it is like to live in this beautiful city: Carl, the Christmas Carp could definitely be used as a read aloud for children at home and with students in primary classrooms. Currently, she is working as a literacy advocate and author. To comment on this title or this review, send mail to cm.umanitoba.
