In her early years, Phoebe attended school, intending to become a teacher. Her childhood also consisted of helping her father with finances at the family store, learning French, and how to play the piano. Clair in to care for his dying mother, and met Phoebe. On June 15, , when she was 19, Phoebe married George in the hopes of leaving her mundane home. Family life[edit] Mrs. George was a successful miner and had struck it rich. In their busy life, George often left Phoebe alone during his work. Also in , she contributed to the establishment of the National Congress of Mothers, which evolved eventually into the National Parent-Teacher Association. A public elementary school near the National Cathedral School bears her name. She maintained the library until The original collection was founded with about , objects representing cultures and civilizations throughout history. The museum now contains about 3. Throughout her lifetime, and as denoted in her will, Phoebe Hearst donated over 60, objects to the Museum. She also funded archaeological and anthropological expeditions such as the Pepper-Hearst Expedition “ on the coast of Florida , near Tarpon Springs. The purpose of these expeditions was to enable anthropologists and archaeologists to study and collect cultural objects. Most notable are the expeditions in Egypt by American archaeologist George A. Reisner and in Peru by German archaeologist Max Uhle. Among these are approximately 20, ancient Egyptian artifacts, the largest Egyptian collection west of Chicago. Phoebe Hearst also realized the importance of such a museum in preserving Native Californian culture. With her support, anthropologist Alfred L. Kroeber and his students, including Robert F. Heizer , documented Native Californian culture in the form of photographs, audio recordings, texts, and artifacts. This research helped to preserve approximately , Native Californian artifacts, the most extensive in the world. The museum collection is available to students and researchers for examination. A gallery located on the University of California Berkeley campus is available for public view. Getsinger also disclosed to Bolles the purpose of the journey: Hearst had been a victim of such an incident, which had caused her estrangement.
