This volume has been peer-reviewed by: Affections and disaffections In search of new directions for European civilisation: Everything is in motion, old norms collapse while the new are yet to be properly established, and even highly cultivated readers find it impossible to follow the vast torrent of material that flows out from both traditional and newly founded publishing houses and innumerable ephemeral periodicals. Now, you will certainly not be so good as to understand this. My liver hurts; well, then let it hurt even worse! Within this polemic, this reaction against positivism, we are able, then, to trace two contradictory trends: Introduction 9 This fundamental axiological dichotomy involves yet further contradictions. For their philosophy, the symbolists read Schopenhauer, and of course Nietzsche, whose works even inspired Georg Brandes to write the concise manifesto Aristocratic Radicalism, an artistic revolt against the tyranny of mediocrity, bourgeois tastes and modern mass culture. In terms of their politics, symbolists are almost impossible to classify as they span the entire spectrum of the political parties and movements of the day: We invite the reader to seek answers to this question in the chapters that follow. Hugo von Hofmannsthal 1 Two trends in modernist literature: Romantic roots In the world of literature and the arts at the turn of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, we are able to distinguish two separate but frequently converging trends that sought to come to terms with what was generally perceived as a crisis in European civilisation. Ryder, in F. In search of new directions for European civilisation 15 Abstracts In search of new directions for European civilisation: The philosophy of the history of Russian Symbolism From among the many characteristics descriptive of spiritual life at the turn of the twentieth century, this chapter focuses on the revival of the Romantic vision of the cosmos as an organic, dynamic and creative whole. This vision served as the basis both for the epistemological reflections on the differences between the humanities and the empirically oriented sciences W. This response found its strongest expression in the concept of sobornost, which attempted to capture the communal nature of individual spiritual activities. In the Symbolist era, this tendency is represented by the philosophers V. The renaissance of modernity The chapter focuses on the paradigm shift in Spanish thought which took place around the year The new literature is Abstracts characterised by the appearance of a number of distinctive features: Around the year, however, modernity in Europe is coming to an end. Drawing on the argumentation of Roger Griffin in Modernism and Fascism, it focuses on cultural and societal developments in the United States of America during the period in question. Shadows in the backlands: The Brazilian regionalist short story at the turn of the twentieth century The intellectual and spiritual climate of the turn of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries was torn between adherence to positivist certainties and an enduring interest in the mystery of the unmapped and the unsolved. In Brazil, endeavouring to get in step with the modern world, one particular zone of unexplored shadows was provided by rural communities and their archaic thought. They seem quite shocking to me because of their narrow and inadequate perspective and also due to their retrograde bias. They significantly contributed to neutralization of radical humour in France. The conclusion outlines briefly the development of radical humour in the French 20th century literature and it also offers intercultural comparison with Czech attitude towards humour in order to show, why and how the conceptions of it might differ within different social environments. The two periods have certain features in common: From Naturalism to Symbolism: After, however, the writer stops sending theoretical texts to French newspapers. He continues defending young intellectuals against censorship and accuses the military and political powers of the day of being guilty of criminal activity the Dreyfus affair, but texts Abstracts about Naturalism itself become rare. The texts under discussion, from around, represent an appeal for exceptional literary works written by spiritual aristocrats, and directly or indirectly dismiss contemporary Realism and Naturalism. Between critique and fiction: Modes and challenges of this ambiguity are then analysed. The Frailty of the Fracture: Such analysis shows how the boundary between Decadence and Symbolism becomes a topic with ontological implications, perpetually oscillating between the similarities and dissimilarities between the two aesthetics. Inadequacy and the bourgeois age: Out in the open: An overview of his poetic works corroborates these constant changes. Intermezzo embodies Symbolism of the decadent kind, in which man is perceived merely as an object of biological determination and erotic enslavement. In the Symbolism of Poema paradisiaco, the poet rejects the power of the Schopenhauerian will and contemplates the flow of life from an exalted aesthetic stance. The myth of the dead city in Portuguese fiction at the turn of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries The chapter deals with the myth of the dead city and focuses on urban imagery in Portuguese fiction at the turn of the nineteenth and twentieth Dusk and Dawn centuries. Each of these urban representations, in which particular attention is paid to the social world, anticipate the symbolic topography of Portuguese literature from later in the twentieth century. But they also travel in time and undertake spiritual journeys, searching for God, the mystery of the Universe, or their own identity. Their eternal aim is the Beauty and Harmony which they fail to see in the world around them. The Late Laboratory of French Symbolism: In his approach to poetry and more generally to literature two basic convictions are identified. Based on these two criteria, Visan evaluates the achievements of Parnassian and symbolist poets, but his readings and evaluations are considered somewhat misleading. He seems to overrate the Parnassian call for objectivity and for exact imitation. These hasty assertions are no longer tenable, partly because they deliberately served the purpose of polemic. Cuaderno de lo Bello con Dios During her doctoral studies she lectured in modern French literature at the Faculty of Arts, CUP, and since has lectured at the Pedagogical Faculty, specialising in world literature. Her main interests lie in Italian literature from the turn of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries two monographs: In collaboration with the Italian Cultural Institute in Prague she organised two international conferences: She translates from English and Portuguese into Czech i. She specialises in French literature from the turn of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, literary theory, the history of film, and the francophone Quebec novel. She has published two monographs: About the authors Summary Dusk and Dawn: Literature between Two Centuries This monograph, penned by an interdisciplinary team of philologists from the Faculty of Arts of Charles University and their European colleagues, examines European and American literatures from the turn of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, tracing not only the trends common to the whole cultural region but also the differences manifested in particular national literatures. The book is divided into two parts: The book attests very clearly to the fact that despite local differences, Euro-American literatures faced a common set of problems that included the crisis of modern culture, the confutation of Positivism, the relativisation of art forms and genres, and the problematisation of the subject. The book makes a contribution to a re-evaluation of this period and to a greater awareness of its significance for self-reflection and a possible renaissance of modern culture.
