He and the other Gladers are housed in a dormitory. During the night, Thomas and his closest friends, Minho and Newt, discover that the people that saved them from the Maze and put them in the dorms are now dead, hung. He and his friends explore the dorms, trying to find the other Gladers. They find a boy named Aris who claims to have escaped from a similar Maze experiment. Thomas is unable to find Theresa. He and his friends discover that they all have tattoos on themselves that designate their roles like leader, partner etc. Thomas discovers his role was "to be killed by Group B". He tells them they must now go through phase two of the trials. The scientist explains that they are studying the Gladers and their response to various stimuli. The purpose of WICKED is to find a cure to the virus called the Flare, which is a degenerative disease that transforms a person into a crazed, cannibalistic monster. He mentions that they can actually even control what the Gladers see, feel and do, too. The Gladers are forced to undergo the Scorch trials or else be killed. The next day, they go through a trans portal and are chased out through a tunnel full of traps and into a desert. The Gladers travel through the desert at night until they hear a girl screaming. The girl turns out to be Theresa who is wracked by some unknown secret. All she can tell Thomas is for him to get away from her. Thomas believes that Theresa was used as bait for some sort of trap and that she somehow resisted and saved him and the other Gladers. Thomas starts to regain some of his memories, some of which involve his relationship with Theresa. He remembers that he and Theresa were really close before the memories were taken away. The Gladers travel towards a city. In the city, they encounter a man infected with the Flare, who acts crazy. A storm wracks the city, lightning striking fires everywhere. After the storm, they meet a Crank named Jorge who claims to be the leader of the Cranks in the building. After an altercation, Thomas and Jorge find themselves on equal grounds. Thomas asks Jorge to help him and in exchange he will make sure Jorge gets his hands on the Cure, if they find it. Jorge introduces the group to his trusted partner, Brenda, another teenage girl. Together the group travel through the city, having to face Cranks who try to attack them along the way. Thomas finds a message on a wall that says that he is the real leader. He later finds his name all over the city. He and his group are captured by another group of Cranks who drug them. They are eventually saved by Minho. Thomas is returned to the Gladers healed and safe, with questions running through his head. Thomas receives a telepathic warning from Theresa saying that something terrible is going to happen to him soon. As the Gladers travel further into the desert, they encounter Theresa and a group of girls. Theresa is unfriendly and nasty and plans on killing Thomas for something he did to her which he has no idea of. Thomas learns from the other girls that Theresa was pretending all along to get close to Thomas, that in reality, she hates Thomas. As the rest of the group travels, Theresa makes an appearance and tells Thomas "the act is over". She appears with Aris, and kisses Aris, crushing Thomas who had a sort of romantic relationship with Theresa in the previous book. Then, they shut Thomas up in a room, leaving him to die. Thomas thinks he is dead, but he is soon rescued by Theresa and Aris again. But it is too late for Thomas as things are irreparably changed between him and Theresa. They learn that even though they succeeded in the Scorch trials, things are still going to get a lot worse. Best part of story, including ending: Best scene in story: My favourite scene is when Minho rescues Thomas and Brenda from some Cranks because it was heart-warming that Minho put himself in such a dangerous situation to save Thomas. Opinion about the main character: I like that Thomas is a good leader but this time, I felt sorry for Thomas because all the variables in the trials were messing him up permanently. The review of this Book prepared by Sharon C.

The Scorch Trials Questions and Answers. The Question and Answer section for The Scorch Trials is a great resource to ask questions, find answers, and discuss the novel.

You must read that to understand this. Minho smiled, a very welcome sight. Especially considering how horrible the guy looked. Did you think we were gonna let these bunch of shuck-faces do anything to you? Not only were they rescued, his friends were alive. Frypan was peeking around the corner into that alley up there just as those three shanks pulled a gun on you. He came back, we got mad, started planning our ambush. Most of those shucks were wasted or asleep. This time it was Rachel who appeared from the shadows, Aris following. That made Thomas feel even better, despite the pounding in his head. She noticed and kept hold of his hand until he steadied. Like sweat and vomit. Bodies littered the floor, some sleeping, some huddled together and shivering; some even looked dead. Jorge, Newt and Harriet were there, standing guard, slowly turning in circles with knives drawn and pointing. Thomas saw the other Gladers, too. Though his head still throbbed, he felt a rush of relief and excitement. Where have you been? This was how you greeted people after a day or two apart. Were they the ones who set off the explosion? Ponytail was next to him, and they were both curled up on the ground. How would Minho and the others have dealt with his gun? Once he and Newt were both right next to him, he leaned in. Seemed like the leader. What happened to him? And we should go. Thomas stood with Teresa, Rachel and Aris near the back of the group. Thomas spun around to see Blondie standing down on the bottom step, by the open door, his arm extended. His white-knuckled fingers held the gun, surprisingly steady and calm. It was pointed directly at Thomas. Before anyone could move he fired, an explosion that rocked the narrow alley with a thunderous boom. The impact almost knocked him to the ground, but, similarly as when he had been Stung by Grievors, his friends were there to catch him. Rachel pulled a piece of cloth from her pack and pressed it to the wound, cursing. Aris was calling for the medis.. Somewhere the gun fired again, then the sound of metal clattering across cement and punching. Out of the corner of his eye Thomas noticed that Minho was punching the crap out of Blondie. Thomas finally gazed down at the damage, Rachel having removed her hand to take a look herself. What he saw there made his heart double its pace. A small hole in his shirt revealed a gooey red blob right in the meaty part above his armpit, blood pouring from the wound. And spreading through the rest of his body. The pressure Rachel was putting on the injury doubled the agony but Thomas was thankful for her anyway. The world around him faded another few degrees. Pass out, he urged himself. Please pass out, make it go away. Voices came from a distance again, just like his own had on the dance floor after being drugged. Help me carry him. Hands gripping him from underneath, grasping his legs. Someone saying something about the count of three. It really, really hurt. He rose toward the sky, and the pain exploded anew, fresh and raw. Then his wish to pass out came true and darkness washed his troubles away. Thomas awoke laying on the ground, a rock digging into his back. A fire licked and spit somewhere close. He felt the heat wafting across his body, hot wind through hot air. Someone said, "You better hold him down. Was it glowing red? He heard the hiss right before a billion pounds of dynamite exploded in his shoulder. Everything went dark again. Someone held his hand, it had to be Teresa or Rachel. The three voices were there again, and now Thomas could focus enough to hear a little of what they said. She told me that was what happened to Ximena. Took her days to die. In fact they all did. The intense pain of before had been replaced. In some ways, he now felt worse. Something like an illness crept through the inner workings of his body. A gnawing, itching filthiness. Something foul, like maggots squirming through his veins and the hollows of his bones and between his muscles. Eating away at him. It hurt, but now it was more of an ache. His stomach, gurgly and unstable, fire in his veins. The word infection popped up in his mind, then stayed there. The sunrise woke Thomas in the morning. He noticed the cool air of early morning on his skin, which gave him the briefest moment of pleasure. Then he became fully aware of the throbbing pain that consumed his body, dwelling in every last molecule. It no longer had anything to do with his shoulder and the bullet wound. Something terrible had gone wrong with his entire system. Or the next hour. How could he possibly go through an entire day? Then sleep and start the whole thing all over again?

Despair sucked at him, an empty, yawning void that threatened to pull him down into an awful abyss. A panic-laced craziness struck him. Suffusing it all, the pain. That was when things got bizarre. The others heard it before he did. Minh and everyone else were suddenly scrambling, searching for something, many of them scanning the sky. Why would they be doing that? Then Thomas heard it. A deep thrumming, full of heavy thumps. It grew louder before he even realized what was going on, and soon it felt as though the noise were inside his skull, rattling his jaw and eardrums and sluicing down his spine. A wind picked up, and at first Thomas worried that a storm was starting again, but the sky was perfectly blue. Not a cloud to be seen. The noise worsened his pain, made him begin to shut down again. But he fought it, desperate to know the source of the sounds. Minh shouted something, pointed to the north. Thomas hurt too much to turn and look. The wind grew stronger, gusting across him, ripping at his clothes. Dust flew and clouded the air. Panic seized Thomas now. Goggles covering their faces.

Chapter 9 Summary An influential Italian client is coming to town and K. He wonders whether there might not be a plot afoot to keep him elsewhere and occupied while someone--the Assistant Manager, perhaps--goes through his papers or otherwise looks to damage his standing. He wants to concentrate on his work. It is the only way to solidify his standing at the bank, and he must be doubly on guard for the errors that have begun to creep into his efforts since his case began to tax his energy. Yet he accepts every special commission. Not to do so would be to refuse an honor and possibly to admit weakness or fear. The Italian has also arrived early. The Manager, who speaks Italian, makes the introductions and helps K. He proposes that K. As he is about to leave the office, Leni calls. He goes to the cathedral and waits. The Italian is late. It is raining outside, so K. A caretaker catches K. He notices a small, unusual pulpit that looks as if it would be an uncomfortable place from which to preach. A preacher climbs up into the pulpit. It is an odd time for a sermon, and apart from K. A voice behind him calls out, "Joseph K.!" But he turns, and so must engage the priest. The priest is in fact the prison chaplain, connected with the court. He has had K. It may never even get beyond the lower courts. The two walk together up and down the aisle. The other replies that K. This brief tale, drawn from the writings about the Law, tells of a man from the country who tries to gain admittance at an entrance to the Law, is always denied by the doorkeeper, and yet learns as he dies that this entrance was meant only for him. The chaplain and K. At last the two pace in silence. The chaplain reminds K. It receives you when you come and dismisses you when you go.

The Scorch Trials Chapters Summary & Analysis Chapter 1 As Thomas attempts to sleep after being rescued from the Maze, Teresa speaks to him telepathically.

You must read that to understand this. He was no longer in the Scorch. Where had the Berg taken him? Had he even left it? He tried to call out for them but there was no response. He was entirely cut off. Too soft, just out-of-reach enough that they were impossible to decipher. He heard the click and clack of metal against metal. Small sounds, and the first thing he thought of was medical instruments. Scalpels and those little rods with mirrors on the end. These images swam up from the murkiness of his memory bank, and combining them with the light, he knew. The last thing he could ever imagine existing anywhere in the Scorch. Or had he been taken away? Through a Flat Trans, maybe? A shadow crossed the light, and Thomas opened his eyes. The gas mask, or whatever it was. Behind the protective glass, he saw dark eyes focused on him. Yes, a woman, even though the mask muffled her voice. Not to mention the germs. We have to send him back. A new pain blossomed in his shoulder, unbearable. He passed out for the umpteenth time. The same light shone from the same spot above; he looked to the side this time instead of closing his eyes. He could see better, focus more. Silver squares of ceiling tile, a steel contraption with all kinds of dials and switches and monitors. None of it made sense. Then it hit him. Hit him with such shock and wonder that he scarcely believed it could be true. He felt no pain. No people stood around him. No crazy green alien suits, no goggles, no one sticking scalpels in his shoulder. He seemed to be alone, and the absence of pain was pure ecstasy. Had to be a drug. He stirred at the sound of soft voices, though it came through the haze of his drugged stupor. A man was talking. Another woman spoke, her voice high, almost crystalline. Confused, he tried to remain still, listen. He responds really sharply to the Variables. Wait, I think I just saw his eyes move. It was hard, but he forced himself to breathe evenly, as if asleep. Knew he needed to hear more. Before he drifted off he did hear one last thing, from the first woman. He was dropped to the ground, surrounded by the other Gladers. Someone knelt by his side. Pulled him into a tight hug. Everyone was talking at once, single questions indecipherable in the din. Rachel and Aris were with her of course, hugging him and asking what had happened. Thomas was deep in thought as she did, the things were tight. How many people had died in the Scorch, the Maze? Everyone else had trekked back under a small decrepit hut, it looked like a strong wind would blow the place apart. The Gladers all lay down, crammed like sardines as they had in the Homestead, ready to sleep the day away. Thomas and his friends claimed a corner. They had to talk, about so many things, and they could do it telepathically so no one heard. Aris started the conversation. It was doable within those parameters but could be a tight squeeze. He would have to talk to her about that too. I kept passing out, but they took me to some doctors who totally fixed me up. Thomas continued to explain everything he had heard, three blank faces stared back at him. It was a good thing he was talking to the people who understood him the most. They sat in silence for a few moments. Eventually Aris and Rachel left to go and sleep, curling on top of their sheet against the wall. It was amazing they still had the thing. Teresa stayed beside Thomas, sleep called to him, but he had to get everything straight with her. What happened in that weird party She leaned forward, pecked his lips quickly. An indescribable feeling started in his chest, somehow stronger than in the club, even if the kiss had been nowhere near as intense. They lay down close together, and Thomas slept better than he had in a long time.

5: live the adventure: The Giver Chapter 1 - 5

The Scorch Trials Chapter 5 summary. Brief summary of Chapter 5 in The Scorch Trials book.

Victor tells of his happy childhood, and how passionate he is about life and learning. Science is his focus and he feels that he must always strive to learn more. Chapter Two Continued Victor changes his studies to math and science built on a secure foundation after reading Sir Isaac Newton. Chapter ends with foreshadowing: Elizabeth gets scarlet fever. Victor makes rapid progress in his studies. He improves some chemical instrumentation at the university and receives accolades. Becomes interested in the structure of the human frame. Says to examine life, one must look at death, so he goes to graveyards to observe the normal decay of the human body. Victor visits charnel houses, vaults, and looks at the decaying effects of death on the human body. Decides to make the creature gigantic in size, so the parts will be easier to manipulate in the lab. Victor, himself, becomes an absolutely, exhausted wreck time in school, lab, and prowling graveyards at night. On a dreary night in November, Victor is ready to infuse life into his creation. Dull, yellow, watery eyes, deep eye sockets Proportionate limbs, black shiny hair Yellow skin, stretched tightly around his arteries, muscles White teeth, black lips, shriveled complexion Chapter Five continued: Took two years to make the creature. Victor ruins his own health during the creative process. Victor becomes horrified and disgusted as he looks at the monster. After finally sleeping, Victor awakes and sees the creature stretching his hand out toward the creator. Victor escapes from his apartment to his courtyard below, and runs into Henry Clerval the next day who has a letter from Elizabeth for Victor. Posted by Jean Smith at.
