We want your feedback! We hope our FREE self-guided walking tours of Chicago helped you navigate some of the city's most popular sights and neighborhoods, gave you a sense of the city's vibrancy and imparted some useful information and history.

Your guide to getting around in Chicago Posted on by Free Chicago Walking Tours Chicago is the countries 3rd largest city as of July which means that you have access to all the bells and whistles as it pertains to getting around. Bikes, cars, buses, trains, boats – all are available to help you get from point A to point B in Chicago. But all of these options can be confusing. Chicago Public Transportation Besides walking – which we we talk about a little later – using public transportation in the City of Chicago is the most economical way of getting around. This system is operated, managed and serviced by the Chicago Transit Authority. Buses – CTA operates 1, buses, routes and 1, route miles. Speaking of Ventra, make sure you read this section below on what exactly Ventra is and how to use it. These trains are often the most efficient to connect commuters to long ish distances within the city. The lines are organized by color. Now is a great time to talk about Ventra. Ventura is the contact-less payment system used by the CTA. There are two options: Purchase a disposable ticket. We have no clue what the limited use media fee is. If you think you are going to ride the trains and buses a few times in a day this is a great option. Either way that is pretty dang good. Currently Chicago has over miles of protected bike lanes in the city, Divvy bikes are available 24 hours a day, days a year. You will want to read the how-to-guide provided by Divvy for all of the important details, but the basics are this: You either purchase an annual membership online or, most likely, you will purchase a 24hr pass at the Divvy bike station near you. Riders need to return the bike to any Divvy station within 30 minutes. You could theoretically return and re-rent your Divvy bike immediately for those trips that are longer than 30 minutes. Please find below the rate schedule for taxis in Chicago as of January 1, You download the app, setup an account, add your credit card information and start booking your rides. It really is so easy. Once you try out one of the companies it will be hard to go back to the traditional hailing a cab – especially in bad weather. Some other aspects of this type of ride that we love is not having to exchange cash or even get your wallet out. The transaction is all handled through the app with the credit card information you provided and saved to your profile. The drivers are rated by users on a scale from If drivers are poorly rated they risk having their driving privileges suspended i. Driving in any city, including Chicago, can be a pain in the butt. Traffic into and out of the city, especially in the rush hour morning and evening, can drive just about anyone crazy. If you have or want to drive we recommend downloading either Google Maps or Waze. These two transit apps will ensure that your drive will be as fast as it possibly can be. Parking is an entirely separate can of worms. So you made it to downtown Chicago and you still are sane? Great, but now you much find where to park. Chicago is not making it easy on your either. We have free parking on the streets, we have paid parking on the streets and we have permit-only parking on the streets – so make sure you are paying attention! Once again technology comes to the rescue with a couple of apps helping you find the closest and cheapest parking available in the city. Parking Panda will help you locate a parking spot by providing an address, city, neighborhood or zip code. They bill themselves as the 1 Parking App. SpotHero operates in the same fashion priding itself on how quickly you can find, secure and pay for parking on their app.
