Some people might disagree, but I think exam scripts are the best way to prepare for, and answer, exam questions. Oh, and remember that you should be answering exam questions using the IRAC method. An explanation on IRAC with examples can be found here. A little bit of nervousness is a good thing – it keeps us alert and makes sure that we put in a little bit extra effort. One easy way to feel confident with your exam summary, and improve it at the same time, is by using the massive amount of free resources available online. This means that even notes that are a few years old can be very useful. Areas of law that have been overhauled by legislation. For example, the introduction of the uniform evidence laws. This can occur when the high court has overturned some important case. Property laws will be different in New South Wales and Victoria due different property legislation in both states. Study notes and tutorial summaries by Queensland University of Technology students. UNSW law students have created this great wiki for legal subjects. Law Study Notes Australia: A group of University of New South Wales law students have created these notes. Some very old but comprehensive notes by University of Adelaide student Dennis Lim. Simply Google for a more specific set of notes. The only disadvantage of this is that it can take a little longer to find the notes you are after. It can also be extremely helpful to search for a specific filetype. I found the best way to do this is to prepare an outline and rough first draft of your script using your own notes and lecture notes. Take a small amount of time to fill in any missing pieces by reading the textbook and cases. Once this is done, you can start using online materials. And similarly, go back to your lecture notes again – have you missed anything? Being able to consolidate your learning like this is a really important step in the learning process. Paying for exam notes and summaries If you do take a look online, you will notice that there are plenty of websites offering law exam notes for a fee. Many of them know of, and willing exploit, the pressure that law students are under to score highly on every single exam. Hopefully this has been helpful and provides you with another tool to put in your law school arsenal. If you found this helpful, please share it around!

What is Commercial law? There is no established definition of Commercial law. In his Hamlyn Lectures, Professor Goode acknowledged that Commercial law has traditionally been treated as a mere aggregation of specific subjects such as sale, agency and negotiable instruments, each a self-contained field governed by its own distinctive rules. Is there a problem with the specific-contract approach? The shortcomings in the specific-contract approach to the teaching of commercial law were highlighted by Professor Roy Goode in a memorial lecture for the late Professor Clive Schmittoff delivered at the Annual meeting of the Association of Law Teachers in Nottingham on 4th April. The first part of the [module] looks at general concepts of personal property law and begins by examining the transfer of property in sales of goods including title disputes with third parties. It then looks at pure and documentary intangibles by focusing on the assignment of choses in action, documents of title to goods and documents of title to money. The second part of the [module] looks at real security in personal property, including priorities between secured interests and the characterisation of, and justification for, real security. Beyond the Core edited by P. Birks OUP, pp. Birks OUP, How we avoid the problems of the specific-contract approach No Commercial law module would be complete without a consideration of the paradigm commercial transaction – the sale and supply of goods by one merchant to another. The retirement of Professor Harry Rajak necessitated a reconsideration of our syllabus. Professor Rajak taught the law of agency, partnership and aspects of insolvency law. Joanna has been teaching Commercial Law at UCL and her research interests are based around the law of insurance, the law of banking and the issue of regulation generally. We have added the law of agency and aspects of banking law to the syllabus removing personal property law, damages for breach of contract and international sales FOB and CIF contracts from the syllabus, and 2. We have reverted to the old model exam paper. What are the sources of Commercial law? First, the vast majority of commercial transactions are based on standard form contracts where the terms are not individually negotiated. The codification of English commercial law Although English lawyers have generally resisted the idea of codification, in the late 19th century businessmen succeeded in convincing Parliament to codify some key areas of commercial law. Although the Sale of Goods Act was re-enacted in 1979 and the Act was further amended in 1994, it remains largely as Sir Mackenzie Chalmers originally drafted it. Whether this 19th century codification meets the needs of the 21st century is a matter of debate. External influences on English commercial law There are two external influences on the development of English Commercial law. First, British membership of the European Union and, secondly, the influence of international conventions aimed at the harmonisation of international commercial law. In establishing the Commission, the General Assembly recognized that disparities in national laws governing international trade created obstacles to the flow of trade, and it regarded the Commission as the vehicle by which the United Nations could play a more active role in reducing or removing these obstacles. The Convention entered into force on 1 January 1988 and currently has 79 parties. The hostility of English lawyers to codification has ensured that, to date, the United Kingdom has not ratified the CISG but this may change. The United Kingdom intends to ratify the convention, subject to the availability of parliamentary time. There have been delays in the past for a number of reasons, but we propose to issue a consultation document in the course of the next few months to examine the available options. We will address the changes that this Bill is likely to entail during the seminars. Studying Commercial law The University of Sussex takes the view that one credit should require 10 hours of study. Commercial Law is a 30 credit module and, thus, you are expected to devote hours to the subject in the months ahead. The 22 lectures and 9 x 2 hour seminars total 40 hours. This means that you are expected to spend hours working on your own between now and the date of the final examination in May or June next year. This works out at around 8 hours per week and does not include talking about how much work you have to do with friends and family, photocopying or copying out your lecture notes neatly. Text, Cases and Materials 4 ed Oxford UP, now covers all the aspects of the syllabus and students are expected to purchase it. Final Thoughts English commercial law has played an important role in the development of the economic development of the English-speaking world. I hope that you have chosen to study the module because you are interested in becoming commercial lawyers and that this module is but the first step in a much longer journey. A 50 minute lecture is far too short a time to give you an adequate introduction to the nature and sources of English commercial law but I hope that you will be inspired to read:
