Out of the renewed interest in United States history, numerous patriotic and preservation societies were founded. They had also held organizational meetings in August Howard Clark, William O. Gill secretary at the inaugural meeting, and 18 other people. Having initiated a renovation of the White House, she was interested in historic preservation. She helped establish the goals of DAR, which was incorporated by congressional charter in 1890. Historic programs[edit] The DAR chapters raised funds to initiate a number of historic preservation and patriotic endeavors. They began a practice of installing markers at the graves of Revolutionary War veterans to indicate their service, and adding small flags at their gravesites on Memorial Day. Other activities included commissioning and installing monuments to battles and other sites related to the War. For instance, they installed a monument at the site of a spring where Polly Hawkins Craig and other women got water to use against flaming arrows, in the defense of Bryan Station present-day Lexington, Kentucky. In addition to installing markers and monuments, DAR chapters have purchased, preserved and operated historic houses and other sites associated with the war. Segregation and exclusion of African-Americans[edit] In 1901 the DAR adopted a rule excluding African-American musicians from performing at DAR Constitution Hall in response to complaints by some members against "mixed seating," as both blacks and whites were attracted to concerts of black artists. Congressman Powell protested and asked Truman not to attend the tea. She chose to go, but said publicly that she opposed discrimination as did her husband. Other letters supported her attendance at the tea. Owing to the "white performers only" policy, the DAR refused the booking. Hurok tried to find a local high school for a performance, but the only suitable venue was an auditorium at a white high school the public schools were segregated. The school board refused to allow Anderson to perform there. During this time, Anderson came under considerable pressure from the NAACP to refuse to perform for segregated audiences. Symbolically, the concert took place on Easter Sunday, April 9, 1945. In 1945 she starred at a benefit concert for war relief during World War II. Owing to poor health, Anderson was unable to attend; the medallion and certificate were delivered to her at her home. Within 26 months, she had traced her family history back to the American Revolution. Batchelor traced part of her ancestry to a patriot, William Hood, an Irish-born soldier who served in the colonial militia in Pennsylvania during the Revolution in the defense of Fort Mifflin. She continues to research her own family history and inspire others to do the same. Her two white sponsors, Margaret M. Johnston and Elizabeth E. Thompson, were dismayed at their chapter response. King quickly corrected her error, saying that Ferguson should have been admitted, and that her application had been handled "inappropriately. The DAR changed its bylaws to bar discrimination "on the basis of race or creed. Ferguson died in March at the age of 70. Focus on racial diversity[edit] Since the mid-1980s, the DAR has supported a project to identify the names of African Americans, Native Americans, and individuals of mixed race who were patriots of the American Revolution, expanding their recognition beyond soldiers. The American government officials had already escaped to Monticello and Charlottesville. After the war, Hemings gained informal freedom when her common-law husband, Thomas Bell, a white merchant from Charlottesville, purchased her and their two mixed-race children from Jefferson. She was forced to leave her two older children, Joseph Fossett and Betsy Hemmings as she spelled it, enslaved at Monticello. She kept in touch with her large extended family, still enslaved at Monticello, and aided her children there. Olivia Cousins became charter members of a chapter with numerous African-American members, in Queens, New York; [26] five of the 13 charter members are African American. Kelly, who organized the diverse chapter, was installed as the Charter Regent and Dr. Cousins as a chapter officer. Today, the museum contains over 30, historical relics that form a collective memory of the decorative and fine arts in America from 1776 to 1865. The DAR Library was founded in 1901 as a collection of genealogical and historical publications for the use of staff genealogists verifying application papers for the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution. Shortly after the growing collection was opened to the public and has remained so ever since. Army appointed DAR member, Dr. Army, in charge of nurses. DAR later funded pensions for many of these nurses who did not qualify for government pensions. The federal government used the land to erect a temporary war office building that provided office space for people. DAR provided materials for sewing, wood, and leatherwork to the immigrants detained for processing on Ellis Island. This helped to alleviate the depression and anxiety of these men and women who were strangers in a new land. To date, more than 10 million manuals have been distributed. Today, the collection flourishes from more than 60 years of actively seeking out and acquiring artifacts that reflect a unique image of our nation. DAR raised thousands of dollars to assist in the re-forestation project of the U. Forest Service during the s. The tradition of celebrating the Constitution was started many years ago by the Daughters of the American Revolution. The resolution was later adopted by the U. More than , women have joined the organization since its founding years ago. The organization describes itself as,"one of the most inclusive genealogical societies" [29] in the United States, noting on its website that, "any woman 18 years or older" regardless of race, religion, or ethnic background" who can prove lineal descent from a patriot of the American Revolution, is eligible for membership". Qualifying participation in achieving independence includes the following: Military veterans of the American Revolutionary War , including State navies and militias, local militias , privateers , and French or Spanish soldiers and sailors who fought in the American theater of war; Civil servants of provisional or State governments, Continental Congress and State conventions and assemblies; Participants in the Boston Tea Party ; Prisoners of war, refugees, and defenders of fortresses and frontiers; doctors and nurses who aided Revolutionary casualties; ministers; petitioners; and Others who gave material or patriotic support to the Revolutionary cause. Its online Genealogical Research System GRS [30] provides access to an extensive database, and it is digitizing family Bibles to collect more information for research.
