Greek hero cult A classical hero is considered to be a "warrior who lives and dies in the pursuit of honor" and asserts their greatness by "the brilliancy and efficiency with which they kill". Classical heroes are commonly semi-divine and extraordinarily gifted, like Achilles , evolving into heroic characters through their perilous circumstances. Hector acted as leader of the Trojans and their allies in the defense of Troy, "killing 31, Greek fighters," offers Hyginus. Indeed, Homer places Hector as peace-loving, thoughtful as well as bold, a good son, husband and father, and without darker motives. However, his familial values conflict greatly with his heroic aspirations in The Iliad, as he cannot be both the protector of Troy and a father to his child. He was the child of Thetis and Peleus , making him a demi-god. He wielded superhuman strength on the battlefield and was blessed with a close relationship to the Gods. Achilles famously refuses to fight after his dishonoring at the hands of Agamemnon, and only returns to the war due to unadulterated rage after Hector kills his close friend Patroclus. Achilles plays a tragic role in The Iliad brought about by constant de-humanization throughout the epic, having his men's wrath overpower his philo love. Fate , or destiny, plays a massive role in the stories of classical heroes. Countless heroes and gods go to great lengths to alter their pre-destined fate, but with no success, as no immortal can change their prescribed outcomes by the three Fates. But, Oedipus slays his father without an afterthought when he unknowingly encounters him in a dispute on the road many years later. The lack of recognition enabled Oedipus to slay his father, ironically further binding his father to his fate. Classical heroes, regardless of their morality, were placed in religion. In classical antiquity , cults that venerated deified heroes such as Heracles , Perseus , and Achilles played an important role in Ancient Greek religion. It is a set of 22 common traits that he said were shared by many heroes in various cultures, myths and religions throughout history and around the world. Raglan argued that the higher the score, the more likely the figure is mythical. Expounded mainly by Joseph Campbell in his work The Hero with a Thousand Faces , it illustrates several uniting themes of hero stories that hold similar ideas of what a hero represents, despite vastly different cultures and beliefs. Within these stages there are several archetypes that the hero or heroine may follow including the call to adventure which they may initially refuse , supernatural aid, proceeding down a road of trials, achieving a realization about themselves or an apotheosis , and attaining the freedom to live through their quest or journey. Campbell offered examples of stories with similar themes such as Krishna , Buddha , Apollonius of Tyana , and Jesus. Occidental Mythology, Campbell writes "It is clear that, whether accurate or not as to biographical detail, the moving legend of the Crucified and Risen Christ was fit to bring a new warmth, immediacy, and humanity, to the old motifs of the beloved Tammuz , Adonis , and Osiris cycles. Departure on a quest Reacting to the test of a donor Marrying a princess or similar figure Propp distinguished between seekers and victim-heroes. A villain could initiate the issue by kidnapping the hero or driving him out; these were victim-heroes. Victims may appear in tales with seeker heroes, but the tale does not follow them both. Philosophy of history and Great man theory No history can be written without consideration of the lengthy list of recipients of national medals for bravery , populated by firefighters, policemen and policewomen, ambulance medics and ordinary have-a-go heroes. Carlyle centered history on the biography of a few central individuals such as Oliver Cromwell or Frederick the Great. His heroes were political and military figures, the founders or topplers of states. His history of great men included geniuses good and, perhaps for the first time in historical study, evil. Most in the philosophy of history school contend that the motive forces in history can best be described only with a wider lens than the one that Carlyle used for his portraits. For example, Karl Marx argued that history was determined by the massive social forces at play in " class struggles ", not by the individuals by whom these forces are played out. After Marx, Herbert Spencer wrote at the end of the 19th century: Before he can remake his society, his society must make him. The Annales School , led by Lucien Febvre , Marc Bloch and Fernand Braudel , would contest the exaggeration of the role of individual subjects in history. Indeed, Braudel distinguished various time scales, one accorded to the life of an individual, another accorded to the life of a few human generations, and the last one to civilizations, in which geography, economics and demography play a role considerably more decisive than that of individual subjects. Readings in the French and English Novel, "The hero attracts much attention because most of those scenarios are based on the suppositions: The definitions of the heroine often refer back to the one of the hero, but sometimes insinuate that their deeds are of less value, or were obtained only thanks to their love of God or a country or of a man. Therefore, implying that an external explanation for the extraordinary nature of her deeds is needed to justify them. The warrior woman is considered unholy, unnatural. Acts of heroism coming from women are acceptable, during specific time, like when men are at war, during times of crisis, but they are otherwise often seen as suspicious. Moreover, women are often not individualized, but praised as a group for heroic deeds. Women in the military were often subordinated to tasks less likely to be praised than armed combat, and are rather praised for their courage as a general force, nurses during wartime are a good example of this phenomenon. If their story gets told, they are made to fit in the acceptable script. Their story is told in a way as to match the expectations of femininity: So the set of strengths in which a heroine could historically express her value are overall not the same and perceived as less valuable than their masculine counterpart. The contrast of the ideal narrative line pits the autonomous, ego-enhancing hero single-handedly and single-heartedly progressing toward a goal versus the long-suffering, selfless, socially embedded heroine, being moved in many directions, lacking the tenacious loyalty demanded of a quest. Not to forget that heroes and heroines are part of a social construct, their history is told and changes throughout history to serve different purposes of memory, propaganda according to diverse social, political or religious evolutions.

Later, heroes and heroines came to refer to characters who in the face of danger and adversity or from a position of weakness, display courage and the will for self sacrifice - that is heroism - for some greater good of all humanity.

Since the very childhood I remember choosing women as my role models. Strong, bright, self-confident women who were not afraid to challenge the status quo, and who were strong enough to stand for their rights and views. Not only for their own rights, but also for the rights of others. As a rule of thumb, such women believed that equality of genders is crucial, and the gender of a child should not be the determining factor of one's future. Such women would excite my imagination and would awake the feeling of self-confidence, which sometimes would be forgotten, especially in difficult situations as we slowly start losing hope in ourselves.

Malala Yousafzai year-old Malala is a Pakistani activist for female education and the youngest-ever Nobel Prize laureate. At 11 years old, when Taliban told the community that girls could no longer go to school, she blogged her story for the BBC. Such behavior did not please Taliban which intended to shut people, and consequently Malala was shot by a gunman during her trip home from school. Acknowledging the power and the need of education, Queen Rania has stated that an essential aspect of education is to equip young people with the necessary skills to perform well in the workplace. In addition to that, Queen Rania has been particularly vocal about the importance of cross-cultural and interfaith dialogue to foster greater understanding and tolerance.

Condoleezza Rice Condoleezza Rice is an American political scientist and diplomat, who was the second person to hold office in the administration of President George W. Born in the heavily racially segregated city, she achieved greatly in life. She rose above the crowd despite racial injustice and worked tirelessly to promote peace and democracy between nations. Condoleezza daringly reshaped foreign policy by putting the needs of America over her own. She demonstrated strict discipline, took initiative and changed the things profoundly. Her efforts to end the war, along with her collaborator Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, helped usher in a period of peace and enabled a free election in that Sirleaf won. This made Liberia the first African nation to have a female president.

The first two books of this series established themselves as ideal biographical sources for young people because of their relevance, comprehensiveness and positive attitude.

More Essay Examples on Society Rubric The most intriguing part of the essay is the portrayal of the modern day heroes. It is what must be taught to people especially at younger ages. At my young age the only heroes I know were those who were mostly presented in many mythology and historical books as. In many books they are subjects of many stories of effective leadership, courage, bravery, and sacrifices characterized as brave, wise, strong and always ready to fight for their cause. I often end up thinking that most of them look very frightening and very strict. When you read through their biographies and writings portraying their heroic deeds you can find the real essence of their heroism. From the definition written above, anybody can be a hero. There is however, a distinctive feature of how we recognize heroes. There are modern day heroes that we easily bypass and fail to recognize. Anybody in the community that is showing desirable qualities is a hero. A friend, our family, a community leader, law enforcers, teachers, preachers, and anybody who has consistently showed remarkable effort towards the welfare of his fellow people, they are all heroes. Our level of recognizing a hero has been blinded by the characteristics that we have seen from heroes in the past. They are very different compared to us today. Heroes in the past were talk of the town for their successful conquests against foreign people, for their successful crusade against those who took away their rights. But none of us have seen the negative effects of their deeds. Many lives were lost and blood was shed before they were able to achieve what they wanted. We seldom see that type of heroism these days. We no longer need to fight and kill because we are now protected with systems of laws that are already established and accepted. And imposing these laws is always based on other laws that protect the rights of any individual in the community. We just have to change our perspective about heroism for us to be able to consider anybody around us a hero. For example, I consider my family as my heroes. I have been through difficult situations and they have never parted from me. My parents showed so much care since the first day I was born. On my first day to school they went inside the classroom with me to make me feel safe. They have provided me with everything and more than I ever wanted. Outside my family I also consider bus drivers, pilots, and other transportation vehicle operators as my heroes. They drive me safely back and forth to our home. Law enforcers are also my heroes as they risk their lives for the sake of keeping me and many like me safe from bad elements in the society at all times. All my teachers and professors at school are also my heroes as they taught me basic, specialized, and advance knowledge that I use to tackle day to day challenges and plan for a stable life in the future. My friends and colleges have always been there for me in the most torrid times and in the most fun times thus I regard them as my heroes too. My pet dog, Leo, is my hero too. He has loyally served me till now, wakes me in the morning, fetches my shoes, walks me to the bus stop and listens to all my fuss whenever I feel low. This list continues on and on since there are so many people what we interact with or are indirectly related too because they touch our lives without us getting to know; thus I consider all of these people as my heroes as they have made my live easier, more entertaining, safe and fulfilling due to their sincere efforts to help anybody around them. May god bless my heroes! Choose Type of service.
