Additional Information In lieu of an abstract, here is a brief excerpt of the content: The general meaning of a contract as well as specific characteristics of construction contracts will be dealt with in detail. What is a Contract? A contract is an agreement between two or more than two parties individuals or organizations to perform or not to perform certain acts. This agreement must also be enforceable by law. They will be discussed in more detail in the next section. An offer is an expression of willingness to enter into a contract on certain terms and conditions and can be made orally, in writing, or by conduct. Just like an offer, an acceptance may also be made orally, in writing, or by conduct. There is no need for consideration to be present in the case of contracts under seal. However, construction contracts that are mostly contracts under seal do have consideration. Thus, for simple contracts it is essential to have consideration while contracts under seal may or may not have consideration. This is the primary reason why most construction contracts are contracts under seal. This means that such a contract must be in writing, signed, sealed official chop, and delivered by the owner in the case of a construction contract. Because contracts under seal need to be in writing, a form of a contract is necessary. There are, in practice, several private forms that have been established by the large industrial corporations for their own use. For government projects, standard forms of contracts for building and civil engineering works are issued by the Hong Kong SAR government. Contractors in such cases will tend to overprice the work, even in times of shortage of work, to cover the additional risks involved. The modification of some of the standard clauses, or the addition of special clauses, should only be made in exceptional cases. Parties to a Construction Contract The main parties to a construction contract are the employer, the consultant architect, engineer, quantity surveyor, etc. A brief description of their roles and responsibilities in the execution of a construction contract is given below.
