And after I wrote that post, I discovered an amazing book that just came out this fall. Amy Schwartz weaves a masterful balance between art and text, with each of the items portrayed as its own well-observed and warmly detailed vignette. The book jacket doubles as a poster featuring smaller-size illustrations of all happy things on the reverse side. A fun, engaging read. There is no story. It is simply a list. The idea is that there are at least things in life that can make you happy. It has a great message: Simple things in life can make you happy. This can be a fantastic writing exercise for yourself or if you are a teacher or parent it could be a fun writing exercise or project for kids! This list could spark other ideas to write about. It could spark other lists: This book could be a great conversation starter or spark between adults and children, or between children. It rhymes in short list format, rhyming couplets. This is one of my favorite ways to rhyme. Not rhyming couplet, but specifically short, list format, rhyme. This book could be used for math as well as a day celebration read aloud! It will put you in a better mood! Thinking about all the things that make you happy is a great way to cheer yourself up if you are feeling blue. Below are some of the images from the book shared from Amazon. Do you think you can think of things that make you happy? My list is going to start with this book!

Today is International Day of Happiness , an initiative supported by the United Nations Foundation to create a happy world for people everywhere. To celebrate, we asked Mashable employees what little things in life makes them happy. For some, a perfectly popped bag of popcorn or clothes fresh out of the dryer is more than enough to put a smile on their face. What little thing makes you happy? Clothes fresh out of the dryer. Breaking perforated seals on just about anything. Peeling a clementine in one peel. A perfectly popped bag of popcorn. A good hair day. Birds chirping for the first time since Winter. Interpretive dancing when nobody is watching. Waking up early and realizing you have hours to sleep. When the Starbucks barista spells your name right. Finding money in your pocket that you forgot about. The elevator arriving the second you push the button. Paying for a small drink, but getting a large. Listening to a favorite song on repeat. Having just enough milk for a bowl of cereal. Getting to the subway platform, just as the train arrives. A box of Corgi puppies. When you turn on the TV and your favorite movie is just starting. Being outside when the weather is just right. Cell service in the subway. The smell of rain on pavement. Puppies in the park.
