Overview[edit] A lasso is made from stiff rope so that the noose stays open when the lasso is thrown. It also allows the cowboy to easily open up the noose from horseback to release the cattle because the rope is stiff enough to be pushed a little. A high quality lasso is weighted for better handling. The lariat has a small reinforced loop at one end, called a honda or hondo, through which the rope passes to form a loop. The honda can be formed by a honda knot or another loop knot , an eye splice , a seizing , rawhide , or a metal ring. The other end is sometimes tied simply in a small, tight, overhand knot to prevent fraying. Mexican maguey agave and cotton ropes are also used in the longer lengths. The lasso is used today in rodeos as part of the competitive events, such as calf roping and team roping. It is also still used on working ranches to capture cattle or other livestock when necessary. After catching the cattle, the lasso can be tied or wrapped dallyed around the horn, a typical feature on the front of a western saddle. With the lasso around the horn, the cowboy can use his horse as the equivalent of a tow truck with a winch. Part of the historical culture of both the vaqueros of Mexico and the cowboys of the Western United States is a related skill now called " trick roping ", a performance of assorted lasso spinning tricks. Will Rogers was a well-known practitioner of trick roping and the natural horsemanship practitioner Buck Brannaman also got his start as a trick roper when he was a child. Etymology[edit] The word lasso seems to have begun to be used as an English word in the early nineteenth century. A carving at the temple of Seti I, Abydos, Egypt. Huns are recorded as using lassos in battle to ensnare opponents prepared to defend themselves in hand-to-hand combat around AD In Mongolia , a variant of the lasso called an uurga Mongolian: Lassos are also mentioned in the Greek Histories of Herodotus ; seventh book. It is not the wont of this people to carry arms, either of bronze or steel, except only a dirk; but they use lassoes made of thongs plaited together, and trust to these whenever they go to the wars. Now the manner in which they fight is the following: Such is the manner in which this people fight; and now their horsemen were drawn up with the Persians". In the Americas, the method of roping cattle developed in Mexico as a way of managing and controlling individual animals lassoing. The tool that was used was called a lariat. Furthermore, in order for this tool to be more productive, the Spanish war saddle evolved into the working saddle we know of today. Although a simple tool, many decades if not a century had to pass for this system to be perfected in Mexico. The hocking knife was similar to the Spanish spear lansa that was used to manipulate cattle as well as for combat.
