By Michael Poh in Office. Updated on November 18, Aside from the job scope itself, one factor that significantly influences how employees feel about work is the environment. A positive work environment makes employees feel good about coming to work, and this provides the motivation to sustain them throughout the day. However, as you shall see below, these qualities are much valued by employees and employers in most jobs. I would say that they are pretty universal in that sense, except in a few exceptional cases. It is what makes employees feel that they belong in the organization. Work then becomes meaningful because the employees know that what they contribute affects the organization that they are affiliated with. Having open discussions get people involved and allow them to share their views and perspectives on how to achieve company goals. At the end of it all, it promotes trust in day-to-day interactions between co-workers, as well as between subordinates and supervisors. There is mutual respect among all employees, regardless of their official statuses. This is when employees will not be afraid to suggest ideas to improve the work processes, thus benefiting everyone in the organization in return. Work-Life Balance There has to be some sort of balance between work and personal life. The Constant Juggle When employees fulfill their various needs and goals in life, such as those of family, friends, spiritual pursuits, self-growth, etc, they can then feel more confident about themselves and perform their best at work. In other words, work-life balance can promote creativity and out-of-the-box thinking. Some employees are simply workaholics who would rather neglect other aspects of their life for work. Managers have a responsibility to show that this is not right, by rewarding employees who maintain good work-life balance habits e. In this case, the organization may adopt a firm stance on work-life balance by educating employees on the benefits of having such balance in their lives or even include it under their mission statement. For instance, technology is evolving so rapidly that what organizations commonly used ten years ago could be made obsolete today e. Zip drives, dial-up modems, etc. This applies to both the individual and the organization itself. A training and development-focused organization has a clear roadmap for training their employees to sustain and enhance the productivity of the organization as a whole. Essentially speaking, there are two kinds of skills that can be developed: A positive work environment would have routine trainings to improve efficiency and instill positive attitudes among employees. Recognition for Hard Work Rewards are necessary to encourage certain behaviors in persons. This is known as positive reinforcement under operant conditioning in the field of psychology. It is used in organizational behavior management as well: When hard work is appropriately rewarded and duly recognized by the management, employees will naturally feel valued by the organization for what they put in. Such mentality is healthy for the organization because employees will be willing to go the extra mile without worrying about not getting anything in return. Acknowledging their Presence Apart from having a system of monetary rewards in place to award those who perform at work, daily interactions can also be a good means of recognizing efforts. Managers ought to verbalize their appreciations for simple little things when employees go the extra mile. However, these should be made specific and personal for the employee to feel that what they do are being taken seriously and appreciated. Strong Team Spirit As social beings, we naturally seek support from our peers and seek to belong to a group. Come tough times, the team should come together to deal with whatever problems are out there. They are now working towards something bigger than themselves, and as a team. Band of Bros Have team-bonding activities that let the team focus on the positive sides of each member and negate the negative ones. Celebrate events like birthdays for each member of your team to show the exclusivity. Deal with issues together. Basically, whatever it is that you do, do it as a team. One pitfall to look out for when team spirit is high is the groupthink phenomenon. This psychological phenomenon occurs when the group cohesiveness gets so strong that judgments or decision-making get clouded. Think about it, when team spirit is strong, members will be inclined to support whatever decision made as a team without raising any valid objections. So what do you look for in your ideal working environment? Full-time freelancers can sit this one out, you are probably already in it.

Use operating system images to create boot disks for your instances. You can use one of the following image types: Public images are provided and maintained by Google, open-source communities, and third-party vendors.

October 8, A value proposition is the 1 thing that determines whether people will bother reading more about your product or hit the back button. When I reviewed a bunch of websites, the conclusion was that missing or poor value proposition is one of the most common shortcomings. What exactly is a value proposition? You have to present your value proposition as the first thing the visitors see on your homepage but should be visible in all major entry points of the site. Such meaningless jargon-propositions are abundant. Avoid blandvertising at all costs. Use the right language Your value proposition needs to be in the language of the customer. In order to do that you need to know the language, your customers use to describe your offering and how they benefit from it. You cannot guess what that language is. The way YOU speak about your services is often very different from how your customers describe it. The answers are outside your office. You have to interview your customers to find it out, or use social media. This is not a value proposition: Heals the wound fast, heals the hurt faster. What the value proposition consists of The value proposition is usually a block of text a headline, sub-headline and one paragraph of text with a visual photo, hero shot, graphics. There is no one right way to go about it, but I suggest you start with the following formula: Sub-headline or a sentence paragraph. List the key benefits or features. Images communicate much faster than words. Show the product, the hero shot or an image reinforcing your main message. Evaluate your current value proposition by checking whether it answers the questions below: What product or service is your company selling? What is the end-benefit of using it? Who is your target customer for this product or service? What makes your offering unique and different? Use the headline-paragraph-bullets-visual formula to structure the answers. The best value proposition is clear: Always strive for clarity first. Yes, sufficient amount of information is crucial for conversions, but you need to draw them in with a clear, compelling value proposition first. What makes a good value proposition: It can be read and understood in about 5 seconds. Also, in most cases there is a difference between the value proposition for your company and your product. You must address both. Presentation of your value proposition matters Original research by CXL Institute showed that users noticed the value proposition more quickly when it had more text took up more real estate on the page. Full study with examples here. How to craft a unique value proposition A key role for the value proposition is to set you apart from the competition. You want your offering to stand out in this important research phase. So how do you make your offer unique? It requires deep self-reflection and discussion. Of course the unique part needs to be something customers actually care about. I call them boosters. These things work well against competitors who do not offer them. Make sure the booster is visible with the rest of the value proposition. I find flaws or room for improvement with most value propositions I came across. Here are some good examples along with my comments:

Mood boards can be a great way to convey your design idea, win pitches and get an early sign-off. Follow this expert advice on how to create them. Shares When trying to convey a design idea to win pitches and get an early sign-off, moods, feelings and visions can be difficult to communicate verbally. So designers will often use mood boards: Get Adobe Creative Cloud now That said, mood boards can be a pain to create, with many hours spent trawling image galleries, websites, books and magazines looking for that perfect image to sum up your intended feel for the work at hand. The right tools for creating mood boards can help, as can the following tips on making your mood board process more effective – increasing your chances of winning that pitch. For example, while working on the ITV news website, digital product design company Made by Many looked at copies of the veteran Picture Post magazine in order to express how powerful and effective an image plus a caption can be for telling a news story. So use the camera on your phone to take pictures of everything you see that inspires you, whether that be a bird in flight, great use of typography on a sign, or the brickwork on a building. Curate what you include Have you ever had the misfortune of going to a gallery exhibition and it just not doing anything for you? When putting together mood boards, think of yourself as a curator rather than a collector, and try to introduce meaning and threads from one image to the next. It makes for easier interpretation. The distinction is not trivial; the two formats demand very different approaches. An offline mood board will generally be looser in style and require the extra kick and emotive spark that comes from it being presented to a client. An online mood board should be tighter and will generally need to work harder to convey a theme or style. Build things up around a large image Whether your mood board is electronic or physical, the layout needs to give prominence to key theme images. You can then surround these with smaller supporting images that enhance the theme. If you place smaller supporting images around the larger image they should answer these questions by clarifying the messaging given in the larger one. Traditionally, mood boards are made from foam board. Just be careful with your fingers on that blade Incorporate your board into your pitch Generally mood boards are considered to be separate to pitch or presentation work: This is standard practice, but consider instead making them part of your pitch or presentation. Mixing mood board elements in with the presentation – rather than bolting them on at the end – can be an effective way of communicating your concept to the client. Present your own mood board In a similar vein, if your mood board is being presented to the client, try to be involved yourself. It makes no sense to have something that originated in your head being communicated by someone else, because that way meaning can become muddled in a Chinese whispers-type mess. Keep things loose Locking an idea or a style down in a mood board can be detrimental, as the client will feel shoehorned into going with a particular aesthetic. Hone your mood board skills Employees at Landor use mood boards to express themselves to other members of the team Employees at branding agency Landor Associates use a form of mood board to showcase themselves to other members of the team. If you ever want to test out your mood boarding skills, try this out and showcase it to your colleagues. Big, bold words juxtaposed together work very well at creating drama, tone and meaning for any project. You want to let others in, so being deliberately obtuse will earn you no points at all. What would give them a genuine emotive response? Real world objects are good for this. If you were inspired by the beach, bring in a shell. If your eureka moment happened on the train, bring in the ticket. Have fun The whole process of creating mood boards should be fun – a refreshing break from the often tedious tasks of the jobbing designer. The mood board above was compiled for animator Tom Baker as a mood and style guide for creating cartoon versions of The Avengers TV series characters. Instead of relying on one example of a character, several types were found in many different poses, which gave Baker a clear take on the style and direction of the piece. The finished characters for the Avengers animated series Consider preparing mood boards to show other similarly themed projects, websites or functions before creating polished visuals. Using mood boards at different stages of the process can help you avoid this happening.

A title that uses a conceptual image to support the theme of the presentation: Which presentation gives you the impression that the presenter has spent some time and effort to create it? Which one would you like to give your attention to? Obviously, the answer is the second presentation! That is the kind of difference a good opening slide can make to your presentation. In this article you will learn a simple method to create great looking titles even if you have zero design skills. Let us start the process: Get a better grip on the space available on the slide Start by dividing the slide area into small manageable chunks called cells. A cell is nothing but a rectangle of Height Now, imagine the slide as a giant weighing scale. Every time a cell is filled with an image, text or color, the slide goes off balance. You need to restore the balance by filling another cell at an appropriate distance. The fill on the left is balanced by a corresponding fill on the right. You can use a grid like this to create a professional looking PowerPoint floor too. Let us understand this better by exploring a few layouts. Start with the most basic layout: A simple layout that works well is a slide filled entirely with a relevant image and a sharp title. We would represent the layout as completely red in color as per our convention. Here is the translation of the layout into a title slide: The image and the title support each other. You can find a good stock photo that supports your presentation title and make this title slide in minutes. Though the title looks good, you can create more sophisticated titles by playing with the layout balance. Take a look at an alternative here: The fill on the top and bottom balance out. The text box on the left is balanced out by an image on the right. We purposely kept the ratio slightly off to lend some visual interest.
