

1: crossing the river with a wolf, a goat, and a cabbage

In this level students will attempt to cross the ENTIRE river. If they make it to the island, it acts as a "Checkpoint" where they can "Save their game". If they fall in after saving their game, they can start over at the island.

However, one thing is clear, besides the Calabar-Ogoja accord of the seventies which has since crumbled like packs of cards, the state has never had any written agreement or an understanding that the governorship position should be zoned to any particular senatorial zone in the state. Ayade is from Obudu in the Northern Senatorial and he is seeking a second term despite all intrigues and scheming by some stakeholders in the Peoples Democratic Party PDP to stop him at the primaries. They plotted to stop him from getting the PDP ticket and even the last effort to put a candidate against him failed as the screening committee disqualified them all except Emma Ibeshi who was cleared but was dropped at the last minute to the September 29 primaries leaving Ayade standing as the sole candidate. He is seeking among other things, an order restraining the INEC from accepting Ayade as the governorship candidate of the party. But gladiators are continuing political alignments and realignments. Elites from the Cross River South Senatorial district are aligning with Ayade to ensure he succeeds in his second term bid so that by , Ayade and his supporters will in turn throw their weight for a southern candidate. Attempt to drop his current deputy, Prof Ivara Esu, was botched due to pressures from some Efik stakeholders from southern senatorial who believe in the agenda. Part of the strong support Ayade is getting from the south is from the Seven-Alive group led by a business mogul and an astute banker, Chief Asuquo Ekpenyong whose son is the Commissioner for Finance in the state, Ekpenyong jnr and may likely take a shot at governorship in The division even led into a fisticuff among some of the top members in a recent meeting at the instance of Senator Florence Ita-Giwa. Some believe in Ayade and see him as an achiever; some others believe in Owan-Enoh and see him as a more purposeful and visionary leader and besides the Efik interest is more protected with the former Chairman of PDP, Ntufam Ekpo Okon as his deputy while the third group want Ekpo of SDP, a core Efik son but he is seen as an underdog. It does not mean that because you have might, money, your poorer cousin should not be given a shot at leadership. We are a critical part of that whole arrangement call governmentâ€This bad government is seen by only two individuals from a particular zone, no any other person has seen it. Senator Owan Enoh or any other person is of no threat whatsoever. Governor Ayade was in the senate for four years same as Owan-Enoh and he sponsored 47 bills and was given an award as the best senator of the 7th senate. Popularity is based on your antecedent. The economy of Cross River today does not require someone that has no knowledge of how to create the necessary business environment because Cross River is not Akwa Ibom and not Rivers in terms of federal allocation. Things are gradually falling into place. Today, you go through length and breathe of the state, there are many projects scattered all over Cross River State. We would have gone far with that project if not for the Federal Government and some Cross Riverians who played politics with the project. There were several petitions and even the Federal Government took us to court. Two weeks ago, the Federal Government steering committee and implementation committee were on ground over the Bakassi Deep Seaport project. Under three years, we have got more approvals and done more work in Bakassi deep seaport than Ibaka deep seaport in Akwa Ibom which started about 10 years ago. Do you think those in the North, whose right he is trying to take away, would vote for him? I do not think so; he does not constitute a threat to us at all. I say so because in governor Donald Duke contested and he had my good friend, late Mark Ukpo as contender. All other zones have been having a foray into the contest, so we cannot start now. If we give him another term he will kill the state. Let them show us one single road Ayade has started and completed! The governor talks of intellectual money and over Memorandum of Understanding MoUs signed yet nothing on ground except the beautiful private estates and edifices that dot choice areas like Afi-ekong estate, State Housing, MCC road, Diamond hill and few others. Perhaps these are the alerts and intellectual money? Is it turn or eight years of destruction? Is it turn or ethnicity that developed the Obudu Cattle Ranch! Is it ethnicity that promoted the Ranch and the people of Obanlikwu, Obudu and the state to the outside world through the famous Obudu mountain race? The government said it has built power plant in Obudu and Calabar yet no lightâ€this is the biggest opportunity to rescue the state through the ballot box because another four years of Ayade will be a disaster, Cross Riverians be wise. Since the north has been challenging others for the sit. The position is not reserved for any zone but through contest. It is just by convention that PDP has been ruling this state since so if their convention favoured that arrangement okay but others contested. We should not go down to mediocrity. It does not happen that way. Anybody from the south who has capacity and is ready to work should work hard and you can become the governor. That is not it. I was here in when Donald fought for a second term, and there were candidates from across the state. Even in , when Senator Imoke contested the first time, candidates came from the three senatorial districts, including the south. Allow Cross Riverians to decide. I am happy that his spokesperson Ita talks about his performance speaking for him, let us allow his performance speak for him. For me even if you bring a governor from my village and he does not perform well, it shows one thing, that we are all going to suffer. The same way the man in Yala will suffer is the same way a man from my village will suffer from poor governance. Ethnicity is one thing we must keep very far from the issues affecting Cross River today. And under such circumstance you must allow the ideal of rescue to drive you and as far as I am concerned, I must give it to Senator John Owan-Enoh. Cross River has never been reduced to this level. And you find people who ought to be leaders reduce themselves to the lowest levels of sycophancy. It is very unfortunate. The issue of who will become the next governor of Cross River State first is in the hands of God, the next one is the capacity of the person. I believe that we have to deliberately work hard to revive Cross River. I have offered myself as part of the medical teamâ€First there is no governance in the state and for you to lead, there must be governance. If you go to any government office today, you will realize that there is no work that is going on. The materials to get the work done are never there. So those who are in the offices have no business coming to work when the governor is not in town.

Further Discussion Flowers How many flowers do I have if all of them are roses except two, all of them are tulips except two, and all of them are daisies except two? There are 2 solutions: Subtraction How many times can you subtract the number 2 from the number 32? After you subtract 2 from 32, you subtract 2 from 30, from 28, and so on. Square Why is it better for manhole covers to be round rather than square? You can turn a square manhole cover sideways and drop it down the diagonal of the manhole. You cannot drop a round manhole cover down the manhole. Therefore, round manhole covers are safer and more practical than square ones. Further Discussion The Barbershop Puzzle A traveler arrives in a small town and decides he wants to get a haircut. There are only two barbershops in town - one on East Street and one on West Street. The East Street barbershop is a mess, and the barber has the worst haircut the traveler has ever seen. Which barbershop does the traveler go to for his haircut, and why? The traveler goes to have his hair cut at the barbershop on East Street. He figures that since there are only two barbershops in town the East Street barber must have his hair cut by the West Street barber and vice versa. By the way, the reason the West Street barbershop is so clean and neat is that it seldom gets customers. A hated C and decided to kill him - he poisoned the water in his sack only C had water. B also wanted to kill C not knowing that the water of C had been already poisoned and so B made a hole into the sack of C and the water spilt out. A few days later C died of thirst. Who was the murderer - A or B? Well, this is a hard one. In my opinion, there is no clear solution. Each point of view is correct, somehow. Most of the people would say that A is the murderer. Solicitor of B would stress 2 things: B just made C live longer, even if he did not mean to the poison might have killed C earlier. However, solicitor of A could present the following argument: Smullyan pointed out the moral, legal and logical point of view. It is morally clear that both A and B are guilty of homicide attempt. Legally, 2 different courts could judge them in 2 different ways. And logic gives us the opportunity to write a whole book on this topic. Two days later her older twin brother, Terry, celebrated his birthday. At the time she went into labor, the mother of the twins was travelling by boat. The older twin, Terry, was born first early on March 1st. The boat then crossed the International Date line or any time zone line and Kerry, the younger twin, was born on February the 28th. In a leap year the younger twin celebrates her birthday two days before her older brother.

Major themes[edit] Dislocation and restoration The feeling of loss and pain in the novel stems from one main thing: Dislocation is the one thing that creates all the painful stories. Martha never would have lost her husband and daughter. And Travis never would have died in Italy. All of these characters died in lands that were strange to them, suggesting that the characters were ill at ease in their new environments ever since they were taken from Africa. The narrator at the beginning and end of the text, however, is still optimistic, reasoning that his children will still reach the other side of the river "their true home" if they are determined and willing to survive. Nash became so delusional in Africa as a missionary that he was almost like a white slave driver himself, forcing the natives to work for him and scoffing at their ideas of religion and cultural practices. Martha, on the other hand, looked for freedom on the West Coast, and Travis fell in love with a white woman. All of these characters defied the expectation that blacks would live low, submissive lives and fulfill the desires of the white man. Contradiction of emancipation and restriction The irony in Crossing the River is that though Nash, Martha, and Travis are all "free," they still are restricted in many ways. They each deal with their newly found freedom in different ways: Nash agrees to go to Africa as one in a few educated and freed black men. Later, however, he becomes limited and restricted in his own view of the world "he sees things as a slave owner might toward the end of the novel. Freedom for Martha comes at the cost of her life as she escapes the Hoffmans in Kansas. Travis, whose story occurs after the Emancipation Proclamation, is technically free but is still bound by a white culture that refuses to accept his relationship with a white woman. Instead of freedom enhancing their world view, freedom impedes them and is one more obstacle that they must overcome before they can reach the far side of the river. Christianity and its relation to morality and hypocrisy Christians in Crossing the River are presented somewhat negatively. Martha, having lost her husband and daughter and everything worthwhile in her life, completely lost faith in everything, including religion. The Hoffmans try to sell Martha when the family decides they want to move to California. Their decision demonstrates a lack of strong morals despite their religion. Joyce seemed to want some sort of reconciliation with her cold, distanced mother and hoped that religion could fill the gap between them. They all tried to force their beliefs on people that they deemed were below them. Travis alone seems to be the one person who maintains Christian beliefs without becoming a hypocrite. He never pushes Joyce to accept his religion. Literary significance and reception[edit] Crossing the River has been translated into various languages and is internationally acclaimed for its portrayal of the realities of the African diaspora. It has sold hundreds of thousands of copies since its initial publication in and has become required reading in universities across the country. An impressively controlled performance. Phillips distills the African diaspora to an essence, bitter, and unforgettable. A stirring meditation on the hardship and perseverance of people torn from home. For even though the text was written by a white woman, it was essential in stirring up much antislavery sentiment "even in countries as far away as England. Eliza and Eliza Mae are both long-lost daughters. Eliza eventually meets her mother in Canada. Martha, on the other hand, only meets Eliza Mae in her dreams and finds that Eliza Mae has changed her name to Cleo. Martha reports that "all was not right" p. Martha dies moments afterward, signaling her release from the anxiety of not finding her daughter. Through death, Martha is finally able to overcome the pain of her life and "cross the river. World War II, however, takes on a greater significance in the novel since it is actually occurring at the time that Joyce tells her narrative. The text mentions Adolf Hitler, ration books, the Axis powers, Benito Mussolini, Neville Chamberlain, Winston Churchill, blackout curtains, Jerry planes, and even a lack of basic hygiene products such as scented soap so that the reader gets the idea of what it was to actually live in that time period. The first died when Germans bombed her small town because it had a steel manufacturing plant, and the second died in Italy, just a few weeks before the end of the war. The society actually existed until The society closely monitored and controlled Liberia until its independence in Awards and nominations[edit] James Tait Black Memorial Prize
