Apparently she was a very famous ballerina and even danced with Baryshnikof yes, I totally made up how to spell that. But she was pretty famous a few years before I was born My dream is to have those strong, muscular ballet thighs. Or, if I could have the really thin kind that have a space between them. Man, my jeans woul I think I might have liked this book IF Man, my jeans would wear out WAY less often if there was space instead of rubbing when I walked. Anyways, I was under the impression that this book was about the lurid life filled with anorexia and cocaine. Not that I particularly support either of those things, but they sure would have made for an interesting book. Instead, the book briefly mentioned those two interesting things and decided to focus instead on boring stuff, like contract disputes and whining by the author. I think that was the anorexia part. And about 20 pages from the end she got hooked on coke. Even then, not so exciting. Ok, so it got me to thinking about how my life could have spiraled out of control and end with me on cocaine. But by some smart self-defeating actions I saved myself. It all began with the 4th grade spelling bee. I am a good speller. I beat out all the 5th graders in our school spelling bee, except one. All I had to do was out-spell one kid and I was going to the county bee. But I knew that meant that I would have to GO somewhere, ie not just do it during school while I was already there. My mom was always really weird about me participating in things. She was always "VERY" busy. I have no idea what that lady did all day. Anyways, so I purposely misspelled a word so that I would NOT win and therefore have to explain to my mom that I had won and needed a ride to the next level of competition. That was a terrible worry of mine for many years. Not specifically needing to pee during spelling bees, but needing to go in a public restroom. You are probably thinking I am a germophone. The mother had let the child go by himself and the bad guys smuggled him out the bathroom window. But my parents did not know ANY private investigators. So who was going to find me if I got kidnapped from the bathroom? But instead of graciously accompanying me she would get really upset and act like it was a HUGE inconvenience. Knowing that it was a big deal made me just have to go even more. It was an exhausting couple of years. Anyway, the point is that I purposely lost the spelling bee and therefore saved myself from a life of fame that would have surely spiralled into anorexia and drugs.
