Lyrics Bowie wrote this after seeing the Stanley Kubrick movie The Song tells the story of Major Tom, a fictional astronaut who cuts off communication with Earth and floats into space. In an interview with Performing Songwriter magazine, Bowie explained: It was written because of going to see the film, which I found amazing. I was out of my gourd anyway, I was very stoned when I went to see it, several times, and it was really a revelation to me. It got the song flowing. It was picked up by the British television, and used as the background music for the landing itself. Of course, I was overjoyed that they did. Released as a single, the song made 5 in the UK, becoming his first chart hit in that territory. In America, the single found a very small audience and bubbled under at in August. In, back in the UK, the song was once again released, this time on a single which also contained the songs "Changes" and "Velvet Goldmine. He says he is happy in space, but Ground Control comes to the conclusion that he is a junkie. The thinking here being that if you can make it into space then your opinions on football matter. Note to Americans- in this case, by "football" we mean "soccer. He changed his name before the movie came out, but the name he picked is similar to the main character in the film: There was speculation that he got the name from the book The Sentinel, which the movie is based on, but Bowie has claimed that his moniker came from the Bowie knife. This appears on the soundtrack of the Adam Sandler movie Mr. She is the daughter-in-law of the British socialist politician Tony Benn and the mother of Emily Benn, who at the age of 17 became the youngest ever person chosen to fight an election when she was selected in as the Labour candidate for East Worthing and Shoreham. This was originally written by Bowie as a guitar song. It was the producer Gus Dudgeon who turned it into an epic. He recalled his experience working on this to Uncut magazine June. It might have been the first thing he ever produced. Keyboardist Rick Wakeman went out to buy a little Stylophone for seven shillings from a small shop on the corner where Trident Studios was. The Shel Talmy records. I can think of two individual sessions that I did with him. An early version of this song is performed by David Bowie in Love You Till Tuesday, a promotional film made in which was designed to showcase the talents of Bowie. You can watch it here. A video was compiled using footage of Hadfield performing the song in space, complete with shots of planet Earth, his floating acoustic guitar, and a weightless Hadfield. The sublime compilation was posted on May 12, ; it quickly racked up millions of views on YouTube and got the attention of Bowie, who posted about it on his social media accounts, calling it "quite possibly the most poignant version of the song ever created. Releasing a cover song recorded in space poses myriad legal challenges, since jurisdiction is unclear. The original agreement was for one year, so the video was removed on May 13, In November, an agreement was reached and the video went back up. When Bowie was recording the song, he decided that he wanted real strings and Mellotron together. However, the musicians struggled to play the electronic keyboard instrument. Wakeman recalled to Uncut: It was a doddle to do, to be honest. There would have been other things more obvious to do.
