News item from the Westover Me. The stones fell principally on the home of Mrs. White, a widow, lives with her three-year-old daughter, Carrietta. White could not be reached for comment. Nobody was really surprised when it happened, not really, not at the subconscious level where savage things grow. On the surface, all the girls in the shower room were shocked, thrilled, ashamed, or simply glad that the White bitch had taken it in the mouth again. Some of them might also have claimed surprise, but of course their claim was untrue. Carrie had been going to school with some of them since the first grade, and this had been building since that time, building slowly and immutably, in accordance with all the laws that govern human nature, building with all the steadiness of a chain reaction approaching critical mass. What none of them knew, of course, was that Carrie White was telekinetic. Carrie White eats shit. The locker room was filled with shouts, echoes, and the subterranean sound of showers splashing on tile. The girls had been playing volleyball in Period One, and their morning sweat was light and eager. Girls stretched and writhed under the hot water, squalling, flicking water, squirting white bars of soap from hand to hand. Carrie stood among them stolidly, a frog among swans. She was a chunky girl with pimples on her neck and back and buttocks, her wet hair completely without color. It rested against her face with dispirited soggy and she simply stood, head slightly bent, letting the water splat against her flesh and roll off. She looked the part of the sacrificial goat, the constant butt, believer in left-handed monkey wrenches, perpetual foul-up, and she was. She wished forlornly and constantly that Ewen High had individual and thus private showers, like the high schools at Westover or Lewiston. Showers turning off one by one, girls stepping out, removing pastel bathing caps, toweling, spraying deodorant, checking the clock over the door. Bras were hooked, underpants stepped into. Steam hung in the air; the place might have been an Egyptian bathhouse except for the constant rumble of the Jacuzzi whirlpool in the corner. Calls and catcalls rebounded with all the snap and flicker of billiard balls after a hard break. Bell in five minutes. A silver whistle, won in college archery competition, hung around her neck. The girls giggled and Carrie looked up, her eyes slow and dazed from the heat and the steady, pounding roar of the water. Sue Snell had whipped a towel from her hair with the speed of a magician embarking on a wondrous feat and began to comb rapidly. Miss Desjardin made an irritated cranking gesture at Carrie and stepped out. Carrie turned off the shower. It died in a drip and a gurgle. From The Shadow Exploded: Congress Tulane University Press: A Wild Talent Revisited that the ability to move objects by effort of the will alone comes to the fore only in moments of extreme personal stress. The talent is well hidden indeed; how else could it have remained submerged for centuries with only the tip of the iceberg showing above a sea of quackery? The great tragedy is that we are now all Monday-morning quarterbacks.

Her widowed mother, Margaret , a fanatical Christian fundamentalist , has a vindictive and unstable personality, and over the years has ruled Carrie harshly with repeated threats of damnation, as well as occasional physical abuse. Carrie does not fare much better at her school where her frumpy looks and lack of friends make her the butt of ridicule. At the beginning of the novel, Carrie has her first period while showering after a physical education class; the terrified Carrie has no understanding of menstruation as her mother never told her about it. Her classmates use the event as an opportunity to taunt her; led by Chris Hargensen, they throw tampons and sanitary napkins at her. When gym teacher Miss Desjardin happens upon the scene, she at first berates Carrie for her stupidity but is horrified when she realizes that Carrie has no idea what has happened to her. She helps her clean up and tries to explain. Miss Desjardin, still incensed over the locker room incident and ashamed at her initial disgust with Carrie, wants all the girls who taunted Carrie to be suspended and banned from attending the school prom. Instead, the principal punishes the girls only by giving them detentions. When Chris, after an altercation with Miss Desjardin, refuses to appear for the detention, she is suspended and banned from the prom and tries to get her father, a prominent local lawyer, to intimidate the school principal into reinstating her privileges. As Carrie discovers her telekinetic powers, she recalls how they had surfaced throughout her life. She practices her powers in secret, developing strength and control. She also finds that she has some telepathic ability. Meanwhile, Sue Snell , another popular girl who had earlier teased Carrie, begins to feel remorseful about her participation in the locker-room bullying. With the prom fast approaching, Sue convinces her boyfriend "Tommy Ross, one of the most popular boys in school "to ask Carrie to the prom. Carrie is suspicious, but accepts his offer. She makes a red velvet gown. In their family, she says, the power manifests in alternate generations. Carrie, however, is tired of hearing that everything is a sin: The prom initially goes well for Carrie: Chris Hargensen, still furious, devises her own revenge with her boyfriend, Billy Nolan: Tommy is knocked unconscious by one of the buckets and dies within minutes; both he and Carrie are drenched in blood. Nearly everyone in attendance, even some of the teachers, laugh at Carrie, who is finally pushed over the edge. She leaves the building in humiliation. She remembers her telekinesis, and wonders how to use it for vengeance. She considers locking all the doors and turning on the sprinklers. She hesitates when she thinks about the electrical equipment for the sound system, but turns on the sprinklers anyway. Watching through a window, she witnesses the deaths of two students and a school official by electrocution. She decides to kill everyone, and causes a massive fire that traps almost everyone inside and destroys the school. Walking home, she unleashes a wave of destruction on the rest of Chamberlain. After opening the fire hydrants around the school to thwart efforts to fight the fire, she breaks the locks on the fuel pumps at a nearby service station and sends gasoline pouring into the street, where it is ignited by a discarded cigarette, resulting in a fiery explosion. She does the same at another gas station, then opens a gas main, resulting in an even more massive explosion, then pulls down high-tension power lines onto a crowd of people. As she does all this, she broadcasts a telepathic message, making the townspeople aware that the carnage was caused by her, even if they do not know who she is. Carrie returns home to confront her mother, who believes Carrie has been possessed by Satan , and that the only way to save her is to kill her. She stabs Carrie in the shoulder with a kitchen knife, but Carrie kills her by stopping her heart. Mortally wounded but still alive, Carrie makes her way to the roadhouse where she was conceived. After Billy attempts to run Carrie over, she telekinetically takes control of the vehicle and crashes the car, killing them both. The two have a brief telepathic conversation. Carrie had believed that Sue and Tommy had set her up for the prank, but realizes that Sue is innocent and has never felt real animosity towards her. Carrie forgives her, then dies crying out for her mother. One of the few survivors of the fire at the school is Miss Desjardin. She believes that she might have prevented the catastrophe if she had reached out more to Carrie. Both she and the principal resign from their jobs. The surviving seniors attend a grim graduation ceremony. Fictional transcripts of Congressional hearings and a final "White Committee" report are shown; at the end, the report concludes that at least there are no others like Carrie White, so that events like this will not happen again. The town of Chamberlain, now destroyed and abandoned, becomes a ghost town and a popular tourist attraction. It was written while he was living in a trailer, on a portable typewriter on which he also wrote Misery that belonged to his wife Tabitha. It began as a short story intended for Cavalier magazine, but King tossed the first three pages of his work in the garbage can. I could write about them if I wanted to. The other girls would pelt her with sanitary napkins when she got her period. The period would release the right hormones and she would rain down destruction on them! I did the shower scene, but I hated it and threw it away. For me, Carrie White is a sadly misused teenager, an example of the sort of person whose spirit is so often broken for good in that pit of man- and woman-eaters that is your normal suburban high school. Carrie uses her "wild talent" to pull down the whole rotten society. She was a very peculiar girl who came from a very peculiar family. And everybody made worse fun of her because nobody wanted to see her change the mold. According to one biography of King, later the girl "married a man who was as odd as her, had kids, and eventually killed herself. With the support of his wife Tabitha, then employed in a donut shop,[citation needed] he decided to proceed with his writings. As a result, when King received word that the book was chosen for publication, his phone was out of service. The hardback sold a mere 13, copies; the paperback, released a year later, sold over 1 million copies in its first year. Film[edit] The first adaption of Carrie was a feature film of the same name , released in Screenwritten by Lawrence D. It is regarded as a watershed film of the horror genre and one of the best film adaptations of a Stephen King work. A sequel to the first film titled The Rage: Amy Irving reprises her role as Sue Snell, the only survivor of the prom and now a school counselor. However, in this version, Carrie survives the end of the story. The film is said to be "less a remake of the De Palma film and more a re-adaptation of the original text". Released on October 18, , the movie received mixed reviews. The book and orchestrations were revised and updated for a Off-Broadway production. The Off-Broadway production was a moderate success receiving mainly positive reviews unlike its predecessor. Jennifer , a film with a similar premise. April 1, "Stephen King:

Because I already knew most of the story. With three movies and one horrible spin-off, it is hard not to know most of the story. Actually, you know "most of the story" within the first three pages of the book The bike wobbled on its training wheels and suddenly fell over. The bike was on top of him. Carrie smiled and walked on. Carrie White lives in the small town of Chamberlain, Maine. Being a high school outcast, she has no friends and no life. She is victimized by her schoolmates and abused by her over religious mother. It all becomes too much one day when, after her gym class, in the showers, Carrie gets her first period. Since her mother never bothered to tell her what exactly a period is, Carrie assumes she is bleeding to death. The shock, coupled with a bunch of girls screaming at her, disgusted, telling her to "plug it up" triggers a power in her she never knew she had. This extreme outburst is enough for Carrie White to take control of her till then only involuntary telekinetic abilities. What follows is a chain of events leading up to one disastrous night, which is later popularized by the media as the Black Prom. What happens to the world? It is a quick read and I loved the unique narration. The book is written in the form of newspaper clippings of the Chamberlain incident, science journal articles about telekinetic abilities, personal stories of the Black Prom survivors and book excerpts, all stringed together by the actual happenings in the form of a story. Starting with the first newspaper article, you know what happened in the town. Why did the odd teenage girl described in the articles do whatever she did and more importantly, how? You get to pick your own conclusion on the story. Most of the characters are your regular high school stereotypes. From Carrie White to the almost real protagonist Sue Snell, the book has some wonderful, albeit slightly dramatic, characters. This was definitely a great way to kick-start the R. P challenge though my planned kick-start book was Frankenstein, which I am not done reading. Carrie is an amazing book and a must read for every Stephen King fan and anyone who enjoys getting completely freaked out!
