Formation[ edit ] Mascis and Barlow played together, on drums and guitar respectively, in the hardcore punk band Deep Wound , formed in while the pair were attending high school in western Massachusetts. Barlow explained, "We loved speed metal Cosloy had dropped out of the University of Massachusetts Amherst to focus on running his independent record label, Homestead Records , and promised Mascis that if he were to make a record Homestead would release it. Mascis wrote a number of songs by himself and showed them to Barlow, to whom he offered the bassist position. Barlow said the songs "were fucking brilliant They were so far beyond. Mascis explained the concept behind the group as "ear-bleeding country". However, Nakajima used the performance to launch an extended anti-police tirade. A few days later Mascis invited Barlow and Murph to form a new band without telling Nakajima. The music was extremely eclectic and revealed a combination of musical styles that was very unusual, especially for the mids: Mascis wrote all of the songs. Some of the singing was done by Mascis in his trademark nasal drawl often compared to singer Neil Young , but the majority of the lead vocals were by Lou Barlow. Mascis would sing most or all of the lead vocals on all of their subsequent releases. The album did not make much of an impact commercially or critically: At one of their shows, the New York-based alternative rock band Sonic Youth was at first unimpressed by the first Dinosaur performance they saw, but after watching them play several months later, approached the band declaring themselves as fans. During the recording process, tension emerged between Mascis and Murph because Mascis had very specific ideas for the drum parts. And Murph could not handle that. Murph wanted to kill J for the longest time. The album received much more attention in the indie-rock community than the debut. Although the hardcore punk influences were noticeably more muted than on Dinosaur, the overall sound was much more powerful, with the instruments often recorded very loud and with considerable distortion. Meanwhile, Murph played the Mascis-composed drum parts in a very heavy and powerful fashion, resulting in a version of the power trio format. Mascis did most of the lead singing, in a detached drawl that presented a contrast with the extreme music. The songs were highly melodic, albeit with odd song structures that avoided the typical verse-chorus-verse patterns of most rock and pop songs. Barlow also composed two songs: It reached number 4 in the UK independent chart, staying on the chart for 12 weeks. However, this time out, there was even more melody and the song structures were more conventional. In an interview in , after the original line-up had reformed, he said, "Bug is my least favourite of all our records. Barlow now focused all of his attention on the former side-project Sebadoh. Meanwhile, the band embarked on an Australian tour with Donna Dresch filling in for Barlow. The single featured a short-lived lineup including guitarist Don Fleming and drummer Jay Spiegel from the band Gumball, in addition to Mascis and Murph. Major label years[ edit ] Despite the ongoing lineup turmoil, Dinosaur Jr. They made their major-label debut Green Mind in Mascis, whose first instrument was a drum kit, recorded many of the drum parts by himself, layering the various instrumental parts through overdubbing. For touring purposes, Mascis first added Van Conner , and then Mike Johnson to handle the bass parts and embarked on several tours to support Green Mind, with support acts that included Nirvana. The band found their live shows well received in the changing musical climate of the early s, and decided to record new material with the new lineup. This time, the recording sessions were with full participation from Murph and Johnson, with the former playing most of the drums and the latter playing all of the bass parts, singing harmony vocals and even contributing a few guitar solos. The opening track, "Out There", had an accompanying video and was aired on MTV for a short time, as the show Minutes was still popular as a late-night "alternative" video show. And when I started to realize that, he kind of became more human to me," [20] Barlow noted in a interview. In , the original members of Dinosaur Jr. It was met with critical acclaim, rating an 8. It was considered somewhat of a sonic paradox in that even though it featured the original members who produced "two records so drenched in noise they still sound like aural assaults decades after their original release," sonically it resembled the major label releases of the s in both production values and stylistic range. Barlow did make his mark on the music in other ways: The album went on to good commercial success, debuting on the Billboard at number 69 its opening week. In February , the band signed with indie label Jagjaguwar. Problems playing this file? I wanted to make that rhythmic chugging sound like he got playing guitar with the Ramones. And, I found that I got a bigger sound by strumming farther up the neck. He attributed his "whiny low-key drawl", the opposite of the hardcore punk "bark", [10] to artists such as John Fogerty and Mick Jagger.
