You do the hokey pokey and you turn yourself around. That's what it's all about. You put your nose in, you take your nose out, you put your nose in and you shake it all about. You do the hokey.

Which quote was not said by Groom 2. But first, more about this amazing cupcake! What is a Do the Hokey Pokey Cupcake? Each element added something that led to a perfect mix of flavors. This cupcake consisted of: A white cupcake made with caramel and orange zest. Hokey pokey candy folded into the cupcake. Cinnamon mascarpone frosting with a bit of orange zest. When asked what kind of cupcake he liked best, Groom 2. Coffee syrup drizzled on top. Minko did not know that Groom 2. She got very lucky there. Pistachios sprinkled above the coffee syrup the hint of nuts. Minko gave me the choice of using macadamia nuts or pistachios on the cupcakes. I opted for the pistachios. Upon seeing them on the cupcakes, Groom 2. I love that Minko added those elements in, too. You should never lose yourself completely in a relationship. It should be a good meld of two people. The Recipes This section is going to be long. All recipes are compliments of master baker and Cupcake Love Connection participant Minko! As always, I added my own baking notes. Hokey Pokey Recipe Before you get started, you will need to make or buy if you can find it near you some hokey pokey. See my hokey pokey recipe post for more on how to make it yourself. Coffee Syrup Recipe The coffee syrup is used at the end of the recipe to drizzle on the cupcake. This will let the orange flavor infuse into the sugar. With a fork, whisk flour, baking powder and baking soda in a bowl. Beat butter, grated orange zest and sugar in a large bowl for 1 minute, until light and fluffy. Beat in eggs and sour cream until blended. Fold the crushed hokey pokey into the batter. Depending on how much you crush the hokey pokey, your cupcakes will look more or less spotted when they are done baking. I used pretty big pieces, which was more sloppy looking but quite tasty see the photo below. If you want a smoother look, chop your hokey pokey very finely. Bake at F for 21 to 23 minutes or until toothpick comes out of cupcake clean. Cool cupcakes in cupcake tins for 5 minutes. Remove cupcakes directly onto cooling rack and allow cupcakes to cool completely. See frosting recipe below in this post Caramel Recipe The caramel that you will be making here is used in the cupcake recipe. I expected the caramel to be more of a candy consistency, but it was more of a syrup. This recipe also made more than was needed. See frosting recipe below in this post The Cinnamon Mascarpone Frosting The cinnamon mascarpone frosting was a winner! You may want to double the frosting amount if you are going to use large swirls. Perhaps Minko likes some of them naked? She adored these cupcakes. What Minko Knows About Groom 2. She has also now seen his hands. These are the hands, young and strong and vibrant with love, that are holding yours on your wedding day, as he promises to love you all the days of his life. These are the hands you will place with expectant joy against your stomach, until he too, feels his child stir within your womb. These are the hands that look so large and clumsy, yet will be so gentle as he holds your baby for the first time. These are the hands that will passionately love you and cherish you through the years, for a lifetime of happiness. These are the hands that will countless times wipe the tears from your eyes: These are the hands that will tenderly lift your chin and brush your cheek as they raise your face to look into his eyes: He also knows lots of assorted facts about her if he has checked out her blog. Hawaii is sorta in between the continental U. But, how cool would it be if she said yes?! Basically, that would mean that Jonathan and I would need to go as well â€” the meeting would need to be documented. We would also be on the lookout for any Hawaii bloggers out there to join in the festivities! Minko, are you up for a trip to Hawaii? Welcome to Cupcake Project, where everyone from novice bakers to professional pastry chefs can find sweet and savory recipes to inspire and treasure.

Knees bend, arms stretch, Rah, rah, rah! It can also be said "Whoa, the hokey cokey cokey". For this chorus all participants stand in a circle and hold hands: This instruction and chorus are repeated for the other limb, then for the upper right, then upper left arm. Either the upper or lower limbs may start first, and either left or right, depending on local tradition, or by random choice on the night. On the penultimate line they bend knees then stretch arms, as indicated, and on "Rah, rah, rah! Sometimes each subsequent verse and chorus is a little faster and louder, with the ultimate aim of making people chaotically run into each other in gleeful abandon. There is a final instruction set with "you put your whole self in, etc", cramming the centre of the dance floor. United States style of dance[edit] The dance follows the instructions given in the lyrics of the song, which may be prompted by a bandleader, a participant, or a recording. A sample instruction sequence would be: You put your [right leg] in, You put your [right leg] out; You put your [right leg] in, And you shake it all about. You do the hokey pokey, And you turn yourself around. Participants stand in a circle. On "in" they put the appropriate body part in the circle, and on "out" they put it out of the circle. On "And you shake it all about", the body part is shaken three times on "shake", "all", and "-bout", respectively. The body parts usually included are, in order, "right leg", "left leg", "right arm", "left arm", "head", "buttocks" or "backside" , and " whole self "; the body parts "right elbow", "left elbow", "right hip", and "left hip" are often included as well. The final verse goes: You do the hokey pokey, The hokey pokey, The hokey pokey. Copyright[edit] In the United Kingdom the hokey cokey is regarded as a traditional song and is therefore free of copyright restrictions. The horror-themed heavy metal band Haunted Garage recorded a humorous hardcore punk version of the hokey pokey on their album Possession Park In , the rock group Slade released a version titled "Okey Cokey" as a single. The Christmas Party Album In , a band of uncredited musicians known as The Snowmen had a 18 UK hit with the song; there have been persistent unsubstantiated rumours that the vocalist was Ian Dury. Unsurprisingly, these cities were also hotbeds of infectious disease. One of the leading causes of death was tuberculosis, which spreads from person to person in the tiny droplets that spray through the air when an infected person coughs or sneezes. Microbes and the Metropolis. Between and , the disease—then commonly known as consumption, or the white plague—was to blame for more than a quarter of the recorded deaths in New York City. It became the first U. Koch won the Nobel Prize in for his work. He determined that the disease was spread through bacteria-infected sputum, the mix of phlegm and spit coughed up during a respiratory infection. That meant that rampant public spitting—often referred to as expectorating—was spreading the disease. In , in response to the growing understanding of the threat to public health, New York City became the first American metropolis to ban spitting on sidewalks, the floors in public buildings, and on public transit, giving officials the ability to slap wayward spitters with a fine or a jail sentence. Over the next 15 years, almost other U. Members of the public were encouraged to confront defiant spitters, or, at the very least, give them the stink eye. While there were many other factors to blame for the spread of tuberculosis—like dangerously overcrowded, poorly ventilated tenement housing and widespread malnutrition—public spitters became the literal poster children of infection. New York City officials followed through on the threat of punitive action for errant spitters. Few other cities were as committed to enforcing their sputum-related laws as New York was. In , the National Tuberculosis Association reported that less than half of cities with anti-spitting regulations on the books had actually made any arrests. Despite the law, the problem remained intractable in New York. Spitting in streetcars posed a particularly widespread, and disgusting, issue: Men would spit straight onto the floor of the enclosed car, where pools of phlegm would gather. Women wearing long dresses were at risk of picking up sputum on their hemlines wherever they went. Anti-tuberculosis campaigns of the time also featured their own accessory: Faced with the fact that sick people would cough up sputum no matter what a poster in a streetcar told them, in the late 19th century, doctors and health authorities all over the world began instructing people with tuberculosis to spit into pocket-sized containers, then carry it around with them. These containers were known as cuspidors, spittoons, or simply sputum cups or sputum bottles. While they came in various shapes, sizes, and materials, the fancier versions would have a spring-loaded lid and could be opened from both sides, so that you could spit into a funnel-like opening on one side and then unscrew the bottle to clean out the sputum receptacle later. These receptacles became a fixture in hospitals and at sanatoriums where tuberculosis patients went to recuperate, and were a common hand-out from anti-tuberculosis charities that worked with TB-afflicted patients. Its Committee for the Prevention of Tuberculosis raised money to buy its New York City-based clients better food, new beds, and of course, sputum cups. Likely the paper kind, rather than the glass Dettweiler flasks. The society would potentially pull its aid if charity workers showed up for a surprise home inspection to find unsanitary conditions, like overflowing sputum cups that were not being properly disinfected [PDF]. Eventually, the city itself began handing out sputum cups. In an effort to reduce the contagion, by a large number of cities—such as Los Angeles, Seattle, and Boston—dedicated part of their municipal budgets to paying for tuberculosis supplies like paper sputum cups that would be handed out to the public for free. Doctors recommended that the sputum bottles contain a strong disinfectant that could kill off the tuberculosis bacilli, and that the receptacles be cleaned and disinfected every morning and evening by rinsing them with a lye solution and boiling them in water. In an era where infectious disease was often associated with poor, immigrant communities, sputum bottles made it possible to go out in public without drawing the same attention to your condition that hacking up phlegm into the street would. Or at least, somewhat discretely, since they soon became widely associated with consumptives. And while hiding your infectious status is not good for public health, the sputum flasks did lower the risk that you were infecting the people around you as you coughed and sneezed. He won the Nobel Prize for it, 47 years after Koch won his. Even with medical advances, it has never been eradicated. It remains one of the most devastating infectious agents in the world, and kills more than a million people worldwide every year—the exact number is debated, but could be as high as 1. And, like many infectious diseases, it is evolving to become antibiotic resistant. Sputum flasks could come back into fashion yet.

Illustration by Mark Fearing. I sing and put my left foot in and out, careful not to stare at Jill Racine as she and her three-year-old daughter grin and sing and put their left feet in and out, too. Two other parents give Ryder the side-eye, another glances at me pityingly. By the time my boy yanks his left foot out, Jill Racine, her daughter and everyone else have turned themselves around and are putting their right feet in. Jill Racine must be on a hiatus week from her show, since this first day of preschool is the day after Labor Day. No script assignments, either. Jill Racine seems to be enjoying the Hokey Pokey. Amazing what some people do when they get power. As my boy puts his left hand out, I put my head in like everyone else. I was leaning against going and decided for sure Friday on the way home from the doctor. I admit it, I was embarrassed. None of the kids are staring at Ryder, just parents. Today I should just introduce myself, ideally make her laugh. You have to be her friend or make her think you are, then wait for an opportunity to pitch yourself to her. The problem is that, realistically, it could take months. The writers, by okaying stories and then changing her mind after the stories have been broken, outlined, written, rewritten, rehearsed and punched up. The director, by contradicting and belittling him. The other actors, by hijacking their funniest lines, ignoring them or otherwise treating them like shit. Or getting them fired. Actors she probably has someone else fire for her. The mom who was watching me before with pity looks me in the face and smiles as if to say, Buck up. We stop doing the Hokey Pokey “snack time. That is, everyone but Ryder stops because the kid insists on getting to do what everyone else already did. Ryder finally finishes and beams. The two teachers applaud all the kids and herd them to two little tables and gently but firmly shoo the parents off into a nearby alcove next to shelves of rubber blocks. Literally falls into it. We parents watch the pretty teacher place a paper plate of cheese cubes and a paper cup of apple juice before each kid. I suck it up and ease next to Jill Racine. Just then, I remember my dream from this morning. In the cartoon, relentless, maniacal machine music plays as a naked baby is plopped onto a moving conveyer belt and gets bathed, powdered, diapered and bundled by shiny robotic hands which then stick the infant in the beak of a stork that flies off to deliver it to its parents. What the fuck is wrong with me? He stuffs a cheese cube toward his mouth but pushes it into his cheek. Then into his mouth and starts to chew laboriously. I watch closely to see if he chokes. No knowing how bad it will get or how expensive. Writers Guild will cover some, as long as I work enough to keep the insurance. The noises I make are disturbing, frightening, grotesque. Jill Racine puts her hand on my back, I think. I ease the bag away from my face. I breathe deeper and easier, and out of the corner of my eye I see Jill Racine step back into the crowd of parents. She takes it and she laughs, too. His first novel Formerly Cool written with Tom Musca will be published next year.
