Don Aslett is known for his prolific amount of books on housecleaning and I really fancy this book. The reason? If you have a strange question or even an ordinary problem, but it only comes up in cleaning every once in a while; you will probably find the answer in this book.

Personal life[edit] Aslett was born in Before they graduated, both men had a house and four children. Aslett was also not involved in the daily management of the organization by They employed 4, people at that time. Varsity is now headquartered in Salt Lake City , Utah. There are books for household and professional cleaning. The museum features 6, historical artifacts related to cleanliness. Some of the unique items include a horse-drawn vacuum cleaner , an early washing machine , and a 1, year old bronze toothpick. Interactive exhibits teach children how to recycle, clean their room, make their bed, and sweep. He says, "nothing will change your life faster than when you throw away your junk. The landscaping was designed to require little water. The museum has non-reflective windows and exterior LED lights, which are energy-saving. It will teach students about green energy and how plants grow. Wind turbines and solar panels will generate power, such as to provide electricity for lights during the nighttime. To make his talks more interesting, he seeks to entertain, covering topics such as "Make Your House Do the Housework" and "Clean in a Minute". There are no table or chair legs in the house that need to be moved for cleaning. In the bathrooms, the toilets are wall-mounted, the sinks are deep to avoid splashing, and there are no shower curtains. He worked with his daughter who is an interior decorator on the project. Ramaley Award for Distinguished Service, which had never been given to a building service contractor. Aslett said that what is remarkable is that two college friends established an international business from Pocatello, and "put class in cleaning". Luke said, "Don and I managed to build a fun, innovative and creative culture and we did it right here in Pocatello. She states that Aslett has found that one of the best ways to keep a house clean is to remove the clutter, otherwise the cleaning process is more about "shuffling junk from one clutter zone to another" and not about actual scrubbing or cleaning. He has a four step process for most household cleaning:
