

1: Zedd - Slam The Door Lyrics | MetroLyrics

"Please don't slam the door! / Don't slam that old screen door!" a young girl cries. After the dog ignores her plea, the resulting chain of events brings disaster after disaster on the girl's house, each more fantastical than the last.

By Star Editorial Board Tues. Under a federal program, they could hire foreigners at affordable wages to care for their loved ones. In return the caregivers, most often from the Philippines, Indonesia and the Caribbean, were eligible for permanent resident status after two years of full-time work. Immigration Minister Ahmed Hussen should not slam the door on foreign caregivers. Since November , only 1, caregivers have been granted permanent residency in the country. That compares with an average of 8, a year who received permanent status between and Now there are fears it could get worse for the thousands of workers "almost all of them women" who take care of Canadian children, the infirm and the aged in exchange for a shot at bringing their own families to this country for a better life. That leaves many who are already here in the lurch. In the meantime the government says it is reassessing the program, leading many to fear that the pathway to permanent residence for caregivers will be shut down permanently, turning them into perpetual guest workers. If that happens, it would be the wrong message to send out about the important role that caregivers play in Canadian society. The Trudeau government should reward caregivers by making them eligible for permanent resident status after two years of working in Canada. Indeed, the program as it existed in the past "which saw about 4, to 6, caregivers come to Canada each year" was a good one. Article Continued Below First, caregivers boost the economy by enabling parents or relatives of the infirm to work at other jobs. It gives them a chance to bring their children and other family members to Canada. Finally, now is not the time to pull the rug out from under the feet of foreign caregivers. With an aging population and no sign of a national child care plan in sight, Canadians arguably need all the help in this area that they can get. Foreign caregivers provide it. When they come to Canada they should have a way to permanent resident status. Correction "February 15, This article was edited from a previous version that misstated the number of foreign caregivers granted permanent residency since November as
