Fans of Ice Castles and Blades of Glory, agree to disagree. Her one-time skating partner, John Denton, agrees. Not only are they both former skating pros, but they also served as the skating doubles on The Cutting Edge, filming much of the on-rink action in place of stars Moira Kelly and D. Although their competitive skating days are behind them – Carz works in commercial real estate in Los Angeles, while Denton is a medical professional in Las Vegas – they both have fond memories of their time preparing for the historic Albertville Games. Carz also had a small role in the sequel, The Cutting Edge: Going for the Gold. In separate interviews, they gave us a backstage account of how they got involved in the Paul Michael Glaser-directed feature and how they made the impossible Pamchenko move possible. View photos A lift during the Pamchenko move. It was like the week before Nationals, and I was being a bonehead on the Pacific Coast Highway on my motorcycle and wiped out. The season prior to [The Cutting Edge], I was skating with another girl, and she ended up quitting skating kinda out of the blue. So I moved back to Boston for a few months and started coaching skating while I was trying to figure out what to do. I want you to fly out and meet Paul Michael Glaser. Can you make it? John and I were competitors, and we ended up getting cast as a pair in this film. It was totally taboo. Usually, it takes pairs teams about two years to look like a pairs team. I was only required to be on the set for filming for about 18 days, but there was a lot of training with Sharon that went into [preparing for] those 18 days. Once Moira broke her foot, though, we knew we were going to be in Toronto for a while. It was only supposed to be, like, six weeks, and then it turned out to be four months! Your whole life is on hold for this time. That was a weird day; I remember getting in the van to go to the set, and Moira just looked a bit tired and off. In some ways, Sharon and I were like oil and water, for sure. So you can imagine how that works: John and I were kind of getting sick of each other by the end of the movie, but he and I later ended up competing together for a season. But a month after we were done skating together, we were back to being friends again. John had to wear a [fake] chin and he used to take it off and stick it on the wall when we were done on set. I was fortunate in that I looked enough like Moira in wig and full makeup, so I got out of having to wear facial prosthetics. I was dressed up like her, but she actually did the dancing from the waist up by sitting on a moving Steadicam. Moira was a little bit larger upstairs than I was, so I used to use [falsies]. On a daily basis, I pulled [the falsies] out of my outfit and threw them to somebody in the crowd at the end of the day. They made Sharon wear fake boobs to look more like Moira. They had to bleach my hair to make me more of a blond, because I have dark hair – when I had hair! We had a prosthetic chin, too. We had to get the profile right. I remember that they used a different D. View photos The hockey scene. I played hockey for a commercial once, so I had some stick-handling skills, and that came in handy. They pulled in a hockey player to do the stick scene with me and kept wanting more action. I did have to do a blur spin, and they wanted to shoot my feet in a perfect circle. But there was no way I could stay in one spot, even if I did a perfect spin. Then there was the day when I kicked the camera – that was a little gnarly. I actually kicked the lens! I had back injury where my latissimus muscle detached off of my spine a little bit. To this day that injury causes me problems. I reached out to grab her and then detached my latissimus just a tiny bit. I still do trampolines and slack lines – I did my first double back flip over the trampoline at 49 years old this year! View photos A throw jump. Ariel passed away in , and Elizabeth died in Seeing how Hollywood takes artistic liberties is always fun. With the spotlights and dimmed light, this is much more like a showcase. Everything else is black. A lot of times in showcases, the edges of the barriers will have Christmas lights so that the skaters can see when the boards are coming up. View photos The bounce spin. A lot of the skating was real skating, but doing the Pamchenko in one move is not possible; it starts as a bounce spin, then it goes into a quad twist at a back angle, and then the landing. You need to be on wires, because that thing is like a human hammer throw. So the Pamchenko is three items cut into one: It starts out as a triple twist takeoff, which they did part of with an adagio team , and part of it with a doll. For the twist, they initially decided they wanted more like a triple twist or lateral twist, and we were looking at trying to do lateral twisting to get Sharon up in the air spinning sideways. Of course, what I do is spin, so they put me on it. After the bounce spin with the adagio team, it cuts to me on a trampoline that was anchored on the ice, doing a quad at a back angle, not in skates. They had the stunt coordinator working with me on that one, because I had to jump backward, pull in, stay in, and land spinning as they throw a mat underneath me on the trampoline. The shots that made it into the movie were spliced between the bounce spin and then Sharon spinning on the trampoline. Then, at the very end, when you see the catch and her being put back down on the ice, that was Sharon and I. We did a really common twist, the split double twist, because the rotations on the girl and the guy are traveling backward. Then you have to reach in and time her rotations so you can catch her by the hips and put her back on the ice. It looks like D. Sweeney and Moira Kelly are actually skating. I think Sharon was a big part of that; she did look a lot like Moira Kelly. When she put on the wig and they used that silhouette lighting, I was hard-pressed to tell myself if it was Sharon or Moira. I could only tell by the way that they moved, not by the way they looked. I have the original script, and it was actually written to be rated R, and they edited it to be PG, which was a genius maneuver on their part. A lot of the stuff that they brought up in the personalities and a pairs team trying to get together and liking each other " that happens! View photos The triumph. I definitely think the film impacted the sport. It helped as far as popularity and sparked an interest in figure skating. Everybody talked about that movie.
