The essence of duty free shopping is rather self-explanatory: In addition to this, duty free shops in airports are also tax-free. Governments want to make sure that goods sold without charging import duty leave the country, hence why duty free is found in airports, sea ports and at border control. It is however, important to note that there are exceptions. In Malaysia and Argentina, for example, duty free shops are located not only in the departure lounges but also in the arrival lounges after border control. The Philippines have taken it one step further and have a duty free shopping centre situated just a mile away from the airport in Manila. The largest duty free networks include: World Duty Free, Dufry, Gebr. Heinemann, DFS, Flemingo. Why do prices vary in duty free stores? Legal trade tax is much cheaper at duty free shops compared with the high street. But duty free retailers are not exempt from all taxes, but only on parts – income tax is charged on top of employee wages for example. There are several reasons for this. The only thing that we have found to be the exception in duty free shopping is souvenirs. In most cases, they are more expensive at the airport, even without paying tax, than most souvenir shops in the city of departure – so it pays to pick up some novelty tea towels and tacky fridge magnets before you head for home!
