WJRR's Earthday Birthday 25 April 21st, Central Florida Fairgrounds With Shinedown, Seether, Three Days Grace, Bush, All That Remains, Nonpoint, Starset.

April 17, by kendra 2 Comments I have a daughter whose birthday happens to be the same day as Earth Day! But last year we decided to embrace the holiday and make it an Earth Day Birthday Bash! Fortunately, she was game. For example, I created this invitation before I left town and had her assemble and deliver the rest of them after I was gone. I was in such a hurry that I only snapped this picture of the invitations with my phone no Blogger-staged photos this time, sorry! I have seen a lot of cool projects where people run things through their printers other than paper or card stock. This made me rather optimistic that I could run my cereal box chipboard through my inkjet printer and print directly on it. In fact, my printer never worked well after that, so I had to buy a new one. After that debacle, I decided to print on Kraft paper and use my cereal boxes for the background. The idea is that the invitations and a lot of the party elements and crafts are made from recycled materials. For example, the cute butterfly in the corner of the invitation is made from colorful magazine pages. Keeping with the recycled theme, I set the cake on an old cardboard box. Sky paper background found at Hobby Lobby. Tutorial by the Supermoms on One Charming Party We made more butterflies out of magazine paper both as decorations and as a craft for our guests to make and take, but more on that in a minute. Admittedly, some of our decorations were more about setting the mood than saving the planet. I did some quick chalkboard art on the easel and green flowers in a blue vase were rather appropriate. I got a plastic tablecloth with grass printed on it, and hot-glued a grass skirt around the edge to make it prettier and more green! Earth balloons were the centerpiece on each table which doubled as craft space and eating space. And these tie dyed favor bags from Oriental Trading Co, looked great with these printable tags found on Skip to My Lou. Our guests rotated through a few different crafty stations, making a project to keep at each that is made from a recycled product. We scattered the discarded catalogues and magazines across the table to allow the girls to find pages in their favorite colors. Then accordion fold them each like you did when you made fans as a kid. Pinch the centers of the two together in the middle and tie them together with wire or pipe cleaner. These look so cute and are fun to hot glue magnets or clothespins on the back side so they can hang around your house long term. These were also inspired by the Supermoms. I took apart a party hat from the dollar store to make the template. The girls could trace their hat from wherever they wanted in the world. They taped them together with fun duct tape and added tissue paper fringe at the top and stapled twine on the ends to tie them on their heads. But each coin purse is a individual juice pouch cleaned and dried, of course. The edges are held together with the tape, but most of the rest of the tape is decorative. We cut or folded the front side down, so we could have a flap fold over. Self adhesive velcro closes the pouch with no sewing! All of that crafting worked up an appetite! So we served some crunchy and yummy fare to our green guests. A heathy salad bar is perfect for the theme and a great way to accommodate different diets and picky eaters. They could add exactly what they wanted to their own salads. We also served twigsâ€”I mean pretzel sticksâ€”and cucumber and mint infused water. And fruit smoothies served in bamboo cups with birch straws cut to size made a perfect treat. The cake is chocolate dirt with green grass frosting. I initially had thought to bake a ball cake for the top layer to look like the Earth, but keeping in mind, I had a morning and early afternoon to pull it all together, AND make it to the school to share classroom treats , I tried the cereal treat version of the Earth. I actually like how it looks a bit more rustic, than a smooth fondant cake. I also attempted a candy melt butterfly to add to the Earth. She painted the paper mache blue and created the continents with green tissue paper. Of course, the party guests had fun demolishing it absconding with the treasures found inside.
