AYER -- M. Elizabeth (Sadler) Hickman, 74, of Oak Ridge Drive, died Thursday evening at The Highlands, Fitchburg. Mrs. Hickman was born in Camden, N.J., July 20, , a daughter of Jennings.

A cloaked person, a doctor, and a military soldier are seen assisting with the pregnancy. After the birth, the cloaked figure gives the doctor and the soldier "double" monetary compensation for the complications that occurred during birth. Amelia is surprised to discover that she gave birth to two babies instead of the single one she was expecting. She announces her plans to separate the two children so that "they" do not find out about the double birth. She wonders if Kira has forgotten about her in the time that she has been away. Sarah steps off of the train and notices a woman crying and acting frantic on the train platform. Sarah approaches her; and, as she does so, the woman turns around. The two women look identical. Sarah is shocked as the woman steps in front of an oncoming train and is killed instantly. Sarah meets with her foster brother, Felix, at a bar; and she recalls the scene she just witnessed at the train station. Sarah remembers protecting Felix when the two were younger and still active in the foster system. Sarah and Felix as children stand in front of their final, permanent foster mother, Siobhan "Mrs. As Sarah speaks, the neighbor notices her harsh personality and is confused by her British accent. Sarah states that she has family in town visiting from London. Beth cries in her bed, strokes a picture of her and her boyfriend, Paul, and confirms a bank deposit with someone over the phone. She perfects her accent, colors her hair, and dresses up to visit the bank. While she is there, the director asks if she would like to access her safety deposit box. Sarah agrees and discovers birth certificates inside the box. Sarah leaves Kira with Mrs. S and Felix as she is taken away by Victor "Vic" Schmidt, her ex-boyfriend. Siobhan visits a teenage Sarah in jail, who was arrested after impersonating a duchess. S is disappointed in her for getting caught. Lieutenant Gavin Hardcastle escorts Sarah into a conference room where she is to recall the events that lead to the shooting death of a civilian woman named Margaret Chen. Sarah drinks hand soap, becomes sick, and is sent home. Back at the flat, Sarah finds a video that Beth had recorded. Beth is concerned because she does not know who the enemy is and she no longer knows who she can trust. She states that she will never be able to trust Paul, or anyone else again. A young Sarah is ambivalent about her place in Mrs. Siobhan attempts to reassure Sarah that she will not be sent away to another family again. Felix reveals that Vic wants a funeral, but Sarah is against it because she does not want Kira to think that her mother is dead. Elizabeth Childs contemplates taking a handful of pills, but hides in her closet to weep instead. Sarah showers and is in the process of changing her clothes when Paul arrives home from his business trip. He confronts "Beth" about the police hearing and starts to become suspicious of her. Sarah begins kissing Paul to distract him. Beth and Paul practice shooting at a gun range, they run a marathon together, and they sleep together passionately in their bed. Later, Beth becomes suspicious of Paul, discovers letters that he has hidden, follows him as he sneaks around conspicuously, and the two are separated by an emotional barrier when they sleep. Sarah cries as she witnesses the funeral that Vic has arranged for her. As she goes back to her car, she is followed by Katja Obinger, a red-haired woman who also shares a striking resemblance. Someone watches the two women from afar. Beth is on the phone and devises the riddle as a way for each of the look-alikes to identify each other. Sarah does not know how to respond to the riddle, and Katja realizes that she is not Beth. Helena, yet another woman who looks like Sarah, leaves the grassy area on a motor cycle with a sniper rifle in tow. She vows to enact her revenge against Beth for murdering Maggie Chen. Critical reception[edit] Tariq Kyle of Hypable gave the issue a positive review, indicating that "[e]ach frame, whether it looks like a still from the show or an entirely new scene, is beautifully drawn and manages to captivate the grungy essence of the show without being too messy. He criticized the issue for retelling events from the television pilot, often scene-for-scene and the lack of substantial new content with which the reader is wholly unfamiliar. Johnson indicated that the comic "will be appreciated most by those coming in with no past knowledge of the franchise. He explained that the story is "a re-hashing of the pilot episode" and contains "relatively little new [material]. She decried the re-telling of events from the first episode of the television series with few significant flashbacks. Sarah offers eight different covers illustrated by Cat Staggs and an additional retailer incentive cover illustrated by Nick Runge. Additional photographic cover variants can be found on the Loot crate exclusive, the Comicspro version, the Hot Topic version, and the Four Color Grail. Variant C by Cat Staggs offers an illustrated juxtaposition of Sarah and Beth facing away from one another with the hectic lights of the train station in the background. Variant F by Cat Staggs portrays Alison with a gun placed in her right hand and a glue gun placed in the other, with Sarah staring at her from behind. Variant H by Cat Staggs features Rachel and Sarah, with Rachel turned around, staring at highrises through her office windows.

She was an amazing person. She provided directions in the early years that formed the foundation for the successful association that exists today. She was articulate, supportive of others, and a true leader. Her kindness made others strong as she led by example. We your fellow past presidents did a good job because of the foundation you set and your leadership guidance. Sadler was one of the closes ladies to a Saint that we have had the honor and privilege to know. So many wonderful loving memories in Morehead with your family and Mom and Dad as devout and dedicated Christians of our Lord. God Bless and keep you loving family. You remain in our love, thoughts, and prayers! Liz was a precious soul and an inspiration for many women! Sadler was so influential in molding me into the woman I am today. Whether sports, church or just showing integrity in a life well lived Glad they are together again. I thought of you often and wanted more than anything for you to meet my family and your great granddaughter, Jacqueline Suzann Ordonez. I am so proud to be your Granddaughter and so grateful to have been gifted so many of the strong, persevering, generous traits you handed down to your family. We love you and will carry on your strength and love in our caring ways always. Rest In Peace beautiful, strong, compassionate woman you were and will always be in our hearts. I love you and infinitely thank you so very much for giving me my father who gave us his everything and his character and beauty as well to carry on always. She will be dearly missed! This is such a difficult time, yet, there is great solace in knowing she is home with her loving husband, George, and those loved ones that passed before her. Sending your sweet family prayers of comfort and love during this time. She influenced so many young people as a teacher, mentor, coach, community and church member, especially young women. I admired her very much and am so happy to have known her. Much love to Nancy, Laura, John, Sally, and your families. 6: Hyde Co., N.C. Obituaries - Sa - Sh

Elizabeth Engel was born near Berlin, Germany, Jan. 1st, and emigrated to this country in She married Nicholas Sadler in at Chicago and to this union were born eight children of whom the following survive, Mrs. Carrie Schlader, Tony Sadler, Peter Sadler and Anna Hauser.

A bluish colored funnel formed flower in low grounds in bloom. April 10th Sweet William began to open, two weeks later feathered hyacinth was in bloom, and a single pink blooming and the grand procession of color for May and June was on. The foreline of it off by early July, we read that the larger poppy had vanished, dwarf poppy was still in flower, but on the deadline, and pinks were disappearing. Other flowers had put out. There was one bloom on the argemone, and the mirabilis described by the young man Jefferson, as "very clever," was claiming his attention. As a young man he disported himself in the palace gardens of Governor Fauquier in old Williamsburg. He knew Amphill, Eppington, The Forest, the gardens of the Harrisons and Pages, the gay and flaunting gardens of Fredericksburg and Annapolis, and was familiar with those in old New York and Philadelphia. Monticello, more beautiful in situation than any of them, must have a garden of his making, and we find him a young man, dreaming of his plans. With what majesty do we ride above the storm! How sublime to look down in the workhouse of nature, to see her clouds, hail, snow, rain, thunder, all fabricated at out feet, and the glorious sun rising as out of the distant water, just gilding the tops of the mountain, and giving life to all nature! Months beforehand he had busied himself with plans for a shrubbery at the right side of the house, the details of which we find noted carefully in his pocket account book. In the garden in which the lovelorn bachelor saw his lady there must bloom in springtime, dogwood, lilac, wild cherry and jessamine, with trumpet flower and honeysuckle running wild. She must walk among the alder bushes, hardly taller than her outstretched hand, and pluck blossoms from the flowering amorpha, althea, clethra and climbing rose. Joy and sweet bride, cassio berry, barberry, haw, the Judas tree, ceanothus and chinquapin must bow beneath her touch. The long summer sun, he knew too, would shine down on laughing larkspur and gilliflower, snapdragons and daisies, not so gay as she, and there would be pasque flowers, flowers-de-luce, sunflowers, goldilocks and mallows; while in winter the snows of Monticello would gleam in the moonlight on sentinel cedars, yew trees and juniper, with laurel, magnolia and holly, guarding her while she slept. For the grounds in general he laid careful plans. Intersperse jessamine, honeysuckle, sweet briar, and even hardy flowers, which may not require attention. Keep in it deer, rabbits, peacocks, guinea, poultry, pigeons, etc. Let it be an asylum for hares, squirrels, pheasants, partridges, and every other wild animal except those of prey. Court them to it by laying food for them in proper places. Procure a buck elk, to be, as it were, monarch of the wood; but keep him shy, that his appearance may not lose its effect by too much familiarity. A buffalo might be confined also. Inscriptions in various places on the bark of the trees or metal plates suited to the character or expresion of the place. Build up the sides with stiff clay. Cover this with moss. Pave the floor with pebbles. Let the spring enter at a corner of the grotto. The figure will be better placed in this. Form a couch of moss. The English inscription will then be better: Nymph of the grot, these sacred springs I keep, And to the murmur of these waters sleep. Tall, beautiful, graceful and full of wit, Martha Wayles Skelton had not lacked for suitors. She had chosen Thomas Jefferson, and after much feasting they drove in modest manner, behind a single pair of ponies, in the snow to Monticello, there to live, he records, in "unchequered happiness. Married two years or more, a little daughter running around the house, and another due in a month or so, he is found, according to his custom, in his kitchen garden, in the spring, a busy man. Zeal for gardening, however, did not overrun discretion, and careful garden books, begun in and continued to old age, contained records of his plantings, gave drawings and diagrams of plots, and set forth the time of sprouting and of coming to the table. Plantings at Monticello in those days were no mean affair, and it will be observed that the master took some of his learning into the garden with him. Sowing-time came for early peas and marrowfats in early March, and the end of the month generally found them well above ground. In the middle of the month Jefferson sowed and marked, "by sticking numbered sticks in the ground," Anglia de Terra, set down as garlic, radishes de Postoria, Cochleana, de Pisa, horseradish and peppergrass, and made ready for larger ventures. No vegetable was too commonplace, nor too difficult, for this adventurer beneath the soil. Succory, endive, Spanish onions, Savoys, salsify, turnips, beans of various colors, sugar beans, white and red beets, were all given a place at one time or another, with rice, raisins and fine figs. The last week of the month meant a half dozen busy days. First, carrots from Pisa went in the ground, then Salmon radishes, Lattuga lettuce, Windsor beans, cluster peas, spinach and vetch. The next day earlier and later peas were sowed. The day following, green lentils and black-eye peas "yielding, we are told, ten crops; the next, Grano Estivo from Tuscany in seven rows, celery, radishes, cress, and nasturtium in twenty-five little hills. No planting recorded, the next day meant, we will presume, observance of the Sabbath at Monticello; but the work went forward the day following, with the sowing of celery in the meadow. The master then rested from these labors. A note in the garden book for the next day reads: The upper side is 44 feet below the upper edge of the Roundabout and parallel thereto. It is feet long, 80 feet wide, and at each end forms a triangle, rectangular and isosceles, of which the legs are 80 feet and the hypoteneuse feet. That same March day a young orchard was set out. Twenty-four apple trees and nineteen cherry trees were put in from the mountain plan; almonds, both sweet and bitter, were planted, some with smooth and some with heavy rind; apricots, cherries from Italy, and 15, olive slips. Some of the stones, we are told, were cracked, and others not, and this must have meant a busy time for the little pickaninnies on the place. These fruits do not represent the whole variety in which he had a hand "the green gage plums, plum peaches, carnation cherry, French chestnut, English mulberry were all on his lists and were shared with his friends. A Calendar of the Bloom of Flowers in, the season preceding the death of Mrs. The lady of the flowers came and lived among them there for ten happy years, important in the life of Jefferson and thought by some to be his term of greatest service to mankind. He served as a member of the House of Burgesses of Virginia, represented his State in the Continental Congress in Philadelphia, wrote with his own hand the Declaration of Independence, became a member of the General Assembly of Virginia and introduced bills of vast social importance; wrote his bill for religious liberty, and for two years served as Governor of the State. Before the death of his wife he became a member of the Congress of Confederation at Philadelphia. He was at Monticello when, on a morning in September, as set forth on her tombstone, his wife was torn from him by death and he was left with three little girls, a young man still, lonely, among his blossoms withering on the stalk. Wild grief succeeded, and it was in the forests of Monticello that he fought out his sorrow, his horse trampling the drying leaves as they fell. But with the loss of his wife, however, he did not lose his love of flowers. Springtime in the garden meant springtime always in the heart of Thomas Jefferson, and wherever he went, he found his way into a garden and made friends with the flowers. He wondered at the size of the garden at Blenheim Castle, with its two hundred acres, great expanses of water, twelve acres of kitchen garden, and two hundred people employed to keep it in order. He noted carefully that the turf was mowed once in ten days. In his walks, and rides in his crane neck chariot, with fine ladies, in and around Paris, he came to know the gardens and flowers there, and his journal records most interesting observations on the plant life of Southern France and Italy made during a journey there. He noted sweetbriar, cream-yellow clover in beautiful blooming fields and an abundance of yellow iris. The meanest flower that grew was not unworthy of his notice. Describing a visit to New York, he noted the wild honeysuckle growing on the banks of Lake George, an aspen with a yellow leaf, and a short willow with a downy catkin, and described an azalea that presented itself to him as the richest shrub he had seen, "different from the nudiflora, with very large clusters of flowers more thickly set on the branches, of a deeper red, and a high pink fragrance. His "Notes on Virginia" contain the first real study of the flora of the state, and the wide results obtained by botanists from plants and seed brought back by the Lewis and Clark expedition, due in a large degree to Thomas Jefferson, whose spirit animated the whole undertaking, are recognized as his major contribution to the science. It is nearly allied with landscape painting, and generally we find that landscape painters make the best gardeners. Regardless of what was talked around Washington during the eight years of his presidency concerning foreign complications, outlets to be acquired, inroads to be avenged, treaties, trials and elections, cucumbers, cabbage, spinach, salsify, sprouts and squash, turnips, potatoes, artichoke, lettuce, cauliflower and eggplant, along with other varieties of succulents, claimed regularly in spring and fall the attention of the Chief Executive of the nation, who was keeping careful tables, throughout the time, of the appearance and departure from the market of such things.

That day the famous X. He continued, in the midst of wrangling senators, "The first shad we had here was March 16 and March 28 was the first day we could observe a greenish hue on the weeping willow from its young leaves. Not the smallest symptom of blossoming yet on any specimen of fruit tree. The next we will sow our cabbages together. Jefferson, in a letter to Washington, disclaiming in high dudgeon any part in a newspaper attack on a well-known Virginian soldier, and bringing to the notice of the Chief Executive the damaging facts in regard to treatment he supposed himself to have received, took occasion to say: I verily believe that a field of thirty-five acres sowed in wheat in April this twelvemonth has given me a ton to the acre at the first cutting this spring. I shall hereafter put peas into the broadcast, proposing that one of my sowings of wheat shall be after two years of clover and the other one after two years of peas. To his little motherless Maria, he wrote, "There is not a sprig of grass that shoots uninteresting to me. Have you noted the appearance of these things? I enclose for your sister three flowering beans very beautiful and rare. She must plant and nourish them with her own hand this year, in order to save enough for herself and me Kiss everybody for me, Yours Affectionately,.
