Now, one Christmas eve, the poor one had not so much as a crumb in the house, either of meat or bread, so he went to his brother to ask him for something with which to keep Christmas. Not far from here is the entrance to the home of the underground folks. They have a mill there which can grind out anything they wish for except bacon; now mind you go there. When he got in, everything went just as the old man had said. All the hillfolk, great and small, came swarming up to him, like ants around an ant-hill, and each tried to outbid the other for the bacon. When the man got out of the cave and into the woods again, he met the same old beggar and asked him how to handle the mill. After he had learned how to use it, he thanked the old man and went off home as fast as he could; still the clock had struck twelve on Christmas eve before he reached his own door. He had only to speak the word and the mill ground out whatever he wanted. You see the mill is a good one, and the mill stream never freezes. Now, when his rich brother saw all that was on the table and all that was in the cupboards, he grew quite wild with anger, for he could not bear that his brother should have anything. But later in the evening, when he had gotten a little too merry, he could keep his secret no longer, and he brought out the mill and said: When his brother saw it, he set his heart on having the mill, and, after some talk, it was agreed that the rich brother was to get it at hay-harvest time, when he was to pay three hundred dollars for it. Now, you may fancy the mill did not grow rusty for want of work, for while he had it the poor brother made it grind meat and drink that would last for years. When hay-harvest came, the rich brother got it, but he was in such a hurry to make it grind that he forgot to learn how to handle it. It was evening when the rich brother got the mill home, and next morning he told his wife to go out into the hayfield and toss hay while the mowers cut the grass, and he would stay home and get the dinner ready. So, when dinner time drew near, he put the mill on the kitchen table and said: The man twisted and twirled at the mill to get it to stop, but for all his fiddling and fumbling the mill went on grinding, and in a little while the broth rose so high that the man was nearly drowning. So he threw open the kitchen door and ran into the parlor, but it was not long before the mill had ground the parlor full too, and it was only at the risk of his life that the man could get hold of the latch of the house door through the stream of broth. When he got the door open, he ran out and set off down the road, with the stream of herrings and broth at his heels, roaring like a waterfall over the whole farm. Now, his old dame, who was in the field tossing hay, thought it a long time to dinner, and at last she said: Maybe he finds it hard work to boil the broth, and will be glad of my help. But just as they had got a little way up the hill, what should they meet but herrings and broth, all running and dashing and splashing together in a stream, and the master himself running before them for his life, and as he passed them he called out: And now he set up a farmhouse far finer than the one in which his brother lived, and with the mill he ground so much gold that he covered it with plates of gold. And, as the farm lay by the seaside, the golden house gleamed and glistened far away over the sea. So one day there came a skipper who wanted to see the mill, and the first thing he asked was if it could grind salt. It can grind anything. He much preferred sitting at home with a pipe and a glass. Well, the man let him have it, but the skipper was in such a hurry to get away with it that he had no time to ask how to handle the mill. He got on board his ship as fast as he could and set sail. There lies the mill at the bottom of the sea, and grinds away to this very day, and that is the reason why the sea is salt – so some folks say.

The fire-ravaged Greek town of Mati is now home to an almost apocalyptic scene of destruction and misery, writes Europe correspondent James Glenday. Fuelled by 80 kilometre per hour winds, the fires left scores of gutted cars lining streets in the coastal town of Mati, east of Athens, melted by the intensity of the heat. Bodies lay on roadsides, and in one area, a group of 26 people were found dead – some locked in an embrace as the flames closed in. The group, which included children, was found near the top of a cliff overlooking a beach. They had ended up there after apparently searching for an escape route. People gather at the beach seeking respite from the wildfires in Mati. Nikos Kalogerikos via Reuters The lucky ones were able to leap off the cliffs to survive, or rush into the sea from the beach. A man grieves over a destroyed car where he last saw his wife. ABC News Before he knew it, the fire surrounded him. The fire was in the distance, then sparks from the fire reached us. Then the fire was all around us," Mr Stavrinidis said. Flames forced many people to flee into the water. Thanassis Stavrakis There were six people in his group: Mr Stavrinidis, his wife and some of her friends. They swam further out to escape the smoke, but as they did so, they began to be carried away by the wind and the current. They lost sight of the shore and became disoriented. A woman searches for her dog after the fires at the village of Mati, near Athens. Costas Baltas Gale-force winds fanning the flames in the area also hampered firefighting efforts and whipped up the seas. Mr Stavrinidis said he believed they were in the water for about two hours before being picked up by a fishing boat with an Egyptian crew. They made us tea and kept us warm. People survey the destruction in Mati east of Athens. Thanassis Stavrakis Andreaas Passios said "everything happened in seconds". It saved my life. I soaked it, grabbed my wife and we ran to the sea," Mr Passios said. Mr Passios said he and his wife stayed by the sea for two hours. Gas canisters were exploding. Burning pine cones were flying everywhere. A fire truck is engulfed in a pall of orange smoke on a road near Kineta. Thanassis Stavrakis Mr Labropoulis said the flames came within two to three metres of his car.
