Can you please give me advice on my College Essay? The first time I went was a few years back. Ready to take it all in, I went with my family. There is a group, right in the middle of Times Square that gathers every year on April 24th. It was a rally, in the middle of the busiest place imaginable. Hundreds of people were there for the cause, and hundreds more stopped by to see what all the commotion was about. You could see the uniform colors of red, blue and orange on each of the believers and the flags of hatred on the other side. Everyone was angered and most were in mourning, because today was the anniversary of the Armenian genocide. I am an Armenian. My parents were both born in Armenia, and sometimes I wish I was too. I went to an Armenian elementary school and learned about the Armenian history. My great grandma was two years old and every one in her family was killed except for her two sisters one was three years old and the other was a teenager around fourteen years old. During the massacre she grabbed the two babies and fled to the Georgian Republic where she raised my great grandmother. My Grandfathers father was born and raised in Constantinople. At the time he was a lawyer. One of his friends was a Turk, and knew forehand about the planned massacre. He saved my great grandfather and his wife by hiding them at his home until it was safe for them to leave the country. Later on they fled to Syria and stayed there for a while. During this annihilation he witnessed so much wrong that he went back to Constantinople to fight against Turkey. My great grandfather was on the Turkish governments wanted dead or alive list. They captured then hanged or decapitated his friends in a public square. Eventually he went to Greece and lived there, and my grandfather was born. I knew about the genocide, but I never quite grasped the actual impact of it. There he worked as a college professor. Every year, the rally goes on in memory of the two million lives lost during the widespread massacre, and every year the Turkish protesters come also with their flags and claim all of this as untrue. Article of the Turkish law states that denigrating turkey can get you a jail sentence for four years or more. So you cannot talk about the Armenian genocide there. This demonstration opened me up to the harsh reality of life and how millions can be lost in seconds. Sixty percent of the Armenian land was taken by Turkey. The Armenian genocide took place over ninety two years ago and the Turkish government is still denying that the genocide took place. Being there and soaking in all the usual sounds of Manhattan with the extra hundred Armenians and Turkish anger all around really changed me. I have become more patriotic and oppose crime and injustice against humanity.

Hybrid Essay Making a blog this semester in college was a first for me. It really taught me to go through a certain process in order to successfully create a piece of writing electronically. I learned that it is much more comprehensible when there are photos, videos, or other sources involved. The blog was made in order to inform others about a specific topic interesting to the writer. The blog contained photos, articles, and videos to prove its point by other sources. The posts of the blog tie in with each other so they can create a unique type of story for the viewers. This allows them to understand the topic easier. Since this was a cultural blog, it was important for me to provide enough information without being too prideful. Throughout the middle of my blog process, I set up a poll to know what my viewers knew about my topic. After the poll was complete, I made a new discovery. Without the poll, I thought that most of my viewers knew something about my topic or heard about the topic, but I was completely wrong. I began to post more often now that I knew who my audience really was. Most of my posts had to do with the significance and uniqueness of the topic except for three of them. I thought that these posts might start an argument because of the rude articles I found supporting it. The articles were criticizing many aspects of the topic and it could have produced an argument with any of my audience. What is so significant about my topic is that it informs my followers what my culture is about and what goes into each traditional event. The most important part of this process and the blog is that I have to love my topic and I have to think that my topic is significant before I am able to share it with others. Many photos and videos were uploaded along with my posts to make the blog more enjoyable and entertaining. Another reason why my topic was so significant was that as I researched before I posted, I was able to learn more myself. There was a lot more that I wanted to further explore on my topic. I wanted discuss more about food and music. Although I had the chance, I focused more on the traditions, styles of dance, and history. There are over a hundred types of Armenian food that I could have touched up on but did otherwise. There are many famous Armenian singers who had sold out concerts at the staples center and have sold thousands of albums. These artists are worthy of talking about and there is a lot of information I could have provided about famous Armenian singers. If I had done so, it could have interested others to listen to Armenian music and try some Armenian food. I was able to learn a lot from this experience with Project Media. It was interesting using HTML to post different links. Writing electronically can be beneficial because everyone around the world can see your work. You can use media to add to your pieces of writing. Photos and videos are able to tell a story without any words included. What I loved about Project Media was that we were able to upload photos and videos along with our writing in order to paint a better understanding for the viewers. It is much better when there is a picture or article explaining the writing included. Even if your topic has nothing to do with you, people can tell what kind of person you are just by your posts. They can even tell how passionate you are about your topic and how it has affect in your life. My inspiration for choosing this specific topic was a quote by William Saroyan. Throughout my life I have heard this quote about a hundred times and it really meant something to me each time I read or heard it. I knew that I could have written a story based off of this quote, a story with pictures, videos, and more. This blog was what created that story. The Armenian and The Armenian by William Saroyan "I should like to see any power of the world destroy this race, this small tribe of unimportant people, whose wars have all been fought and lost, whose structures have crumbled,.

armenian Caucasus and Armenia Armenia, officially the Republic of Armenia, is a landlocked, mountainous country in the South Caucasus region of Eurasia located at the crossroads of Western Asia and Eastern Europe.

The Gevorgian Seminary His life took a radical turn in the fall of 1880. In September, the twelve-year-old Sghomon was taken to Etchmiadzin by Kevork Vartabed Tertsagyan, the local Armenian bishop, who was asked by the Holy See of Etchmiadzin to find an orphan boy with good singing voice to be enrolled in the prestigious Gevorgian Seminary. On 1 October, Komitas was introduced to Catholicos Gevorg IV, who was disappointed with his lack of knowledge of Armenian, but was so impressed with his singing talent that he often asked Komitas to sing for visitors. After an unfortunate childhood, Komitas found "emotional and intellectual stability" in the seminary. He gradually discovered a great passion for music and started writing down songs sung by Armenian villagers near Etchmiadzin, who affectionately called him "Notaji Vardapet", meaning "the note-taking priest". Tashjian for polyphonic choirs. Kara-Murza composed and organized performances of European music for schoolchildren throughout Armenian-populated areas for educational purposes. And although Komitas criticized his works as not authentically Armenian, Kara-Murza was the person who taught Komitas the polyphonic choral structure around which he built his musical achievements. It was disapproved by a reactionary and ultraconservative faction of the Etchmiadzin clergy, who harassed and sarcastically referred to Komitas as "the love-singing priest". Rumors of alleged sexual misconduct were spread, leading Komitas into experiencing an identity crisis. The six months Komitas spent with Yekmalyan deepened his understanding of European harmonic principles and laid the groundwork for his further education in European conservatories. As Komitas prepared for entrance exams, the wealthy Armenian oil explorer Alexander Mantashev agreed to pay 1,000 rubles for his three-year tuition at the request of Catholicos Mkrtych Khrimian. A group of Armenian friends helped him to find an apartment. He initially took private lessons with Richard Schmidt for a few months. Afterwards, he was accepted into the prestigious Frederick William University. Internationalen Musikgesellschaft, an active member of which became Komitas. He there lectured on Armenian folk music and suggested that it dates back to pre-Christian, pagan times. His studies at the university ended in July 1890. He assembled and trained a large polyphonic choir based on his acquired knowledge. Until 1892, he directed the Gevorgian Seminary choir. He thus took the scholarly task of transcribing and preserving rural Armenian songs. Lyricist Manuk Abeghian helped him to compile the folk pieces. The same collection was reprinted in 1895, while in a further 50 songs were published. In one passage Balakian recounts how: The more we moved away from civilization, the more agitated were our souls and the more our minds were racked with fear. We thought we saw bandits behind every boulder; the hammocks or cradles hanging from every tree seemed like gallows ropes. The expert on Armenian songs, the peerless archimandrite Father Komitas, who was in our carriage, seemed mentally unstable. He thought the trees were bandits on the attack and continually hid his head under the hem of my overcoat, like a fearful partridge. He begged me to say a blessing for him ["The Savior"] in the hope that it would calm him. Next year, his ashes were transferred to Yerevan and buried in the Pantheon that was named after him.

Music Based on the Armenian Genocide The Armenian genocide “ reportedly took the lives of over 1. Three overarching areas of Armenian music have been infused by the genocide: Komitas Vardapet and the Armenian Genocide In terms of Armenian musical history, the genocide profoundly affected musicologist Komitas Vardapet, who is regarded as the father of Armenian national music. Born Sogomon Soghomonian in , Komitas, renaming himself after a seventh-century writer of hymns, studied music in Berlin and transcribed Armenian folk songs during the reign of the Ottoman Empire. On orders from the Ottoman government, he and other Armenian scholars were deported to the interior of the country. Komitas suffered a breakdown, and from until his death he lived in a mental hospital in Paris. As a result, much of his groundbreaking work was lost. Despite this the Arts Institute of the Armenian Academy of Sciences has published six volumes of his musicological works. His Armenian Sacred and Folk Music includes eight original essays, and has provided much of what is known about Armenian music in general. Songs as Oral History Historical validity is often conferred by written texts or other visual means, that is, newspapers and photographs. Oral history can also be an exceedingly important source of historical evidence and allow for truthful descriptions of general conditions. The process is the transmission of such messages by word of mouth over time until the disappearance of the message" Vansina, , p. In the s Svazlian began transcribing and recording the memoirs and interviews of survivors of witnesses to the Armenian genocide. She characterized these songs as follows: Created under the immediate impression of specific historical events on the western segment of the Armenian people, these songs are saturated with historicity. Similar songs have been simultaneously created, in different variants and modifications. Although the songs have been created in the Turkish language , they are, however, of Armenian origin Svazlian , p. For example, the testimonies of Serpoohi Makarian b. Hey, cedars, cedars, variegated cedars, The resin drips every time the sun strikes, Alas! Adana River is full of corpses and blood, Behold! This song depicts the beginning of the genocide, "when young Turks feverishly prepared the total extermination of the Armenian people waiting for a propitious occasion" Svazlian, , p. Later in the same work Svazlian provides songs characterizing the experiences of those who were pressed to walk the "death road": In the very name of faith, Svazlian reports that the following song recounts the torture inflicted on Armenians in the town of Marash: Marash is called Marash, alas! Marash, how do they call you Marash? When they burn a church in Marash, And they burn Armenians in the church. Preserving Armenian Identity in the Diaspora Armenians have maintained much of their history through the ritual performance of their Christian faith throughout the diaspora. The Armenian liturgy and its music comprise the Badarak Mass and the sharagan hymns sung at the services, also called offices, and the sharagan sung for the sacraments. Sung in the classical Armenian language of Graber, the music lends spiritual meaning to the text of the Soorp Badarak Divine Liturgy or Holy Sacrifice. With the participants gathering for the liturgy, their performance becomes an active expression of communal identity, evoking their worldview, which is a direct reflection of their religious belief system as well as the event that brought many of them to the diaspora—the Armenian genocide. If music is then considered in ritual contexts, one can look at it not only as an integral part of the liturgical performance, but also as a way of maintaining historical identity. If music is a sign of a people, then without a doubt Armenian music may be regarded as a referential idiom—embodying meaning that extends the purely musical to that of memory, history, and identity.
