3: Goals of Higher Education - New York Essays

1. Importance of Higher Education Essay The Importance of Education - Words "I have never let my schooling interfere with my education." Mark Twain knew the importance of being educated and placed a high importance on never allowing his mind or body to stagnate.

The purpose and importance of a good education Abstract: I believe that every student is different but special in their own way. Every student should be instilled with good values so that they can grow up to be good valuable men and women. They deserve to be educated in a positive environment where they feel safe, comfortable, motivated and engaged in their learning. As an educator, I will work hard to guide and help prepare life-long learners so that they can choose their future decisions wisely. I feel education is very important in every aspect and the focus should be on more than just the subjects being taught. I think teaching involves one to go above and beyond the basics. It is my belief that all students have the ability to learn with assistance. I am a true believer of open communication because students need to feel they can come and talk to their teacher whenever they need to. The main purpose of education is to help students gain the knowledge and skills so that they will be able to function in society. Students need to be provided with the necessary skills so that they can learn to become productive citizens. There are many advantages that are associated with receiving an education. Students will be able to contribute to their community and help make it a better place to live. Education basically helps shape society because it helps students learn to become more sociable and helps them develop relationships with their peers. Students will be more qualified for different job positions if they have a good solid education. Worldview and Philosophy of Life I think each of us perceive the world differently because we all are different and experience different things in life. I think if you always view the world as being negative then you will not be happy in life. We all know there are good and bad things happening all over the world so I think it is important for us to work together to try and make the world a better place. We learn from our surroundings and life requires every person to make choices and consequences follow those choices. This is why it is so important for each person to choose their decisions wisely and do what is right. The actions a person displays help others determine what type of person they are so we should always display good attitudes and behavior. The world is full of challenges but if you work hard you can overcome them. Sometimes I feel when we go through certain things we are being tested. No matter what I am going through or how bad the situation seems I know that God is in control and he will handle it because my faith lies in him. Truly believing in this is what helps me get through life on a daily basis. Having a loving, supportive family and living a happy life is something that is necessary for me and I am very appreciative of it. Showing others you care for them and that your there for them is what makes life worth living. I want to succeed in life so failure is not an option. I have to keep striving to make my dreams come true because I am responsible for making that happen. In regards to me, life is about being happy, loving God, people, and helping to make a difference in the lives of others. Students can have a prosperous life by receiving a good quality education. My thoughts are that students need to learn from the books along with other various materials just as I did while growing up. The classroom curriculum should be decided by their teacher and the teacher should set clear goals as to what is expected from the students. Students should work hard to achieve their goals because it will certainly be worth it in the end. The school should stress the importance of values because some children are not taught these at home. Teaching children good values helps build their character and helps them become respectable people. In regards to education, I think society is important because this is a place where we all live so we should work to make it a better place. Classroom management is something else that helps the classroom run smoothly. Students need to be taught discipline and respect because it is important for them to respect themselves so they can learn to respect others. The teacher needs to be firm and enforce the rules to all the students because displaying immoral behavior disrupts learning for everyone. Students do deserve some type of recognition and praise when they have acted and done what they were supposed to. Furthermore, even though curriculum is a major part of the learning process, educating students goes beyond subject matter because sometimes students have issues that interfere with their learning. This is why the teacher has to find out what the student is lacking and try to help the student successfully achieve what they need to learn. Instructional Practice Learning involves a person acquiring the knowledge or skills that is being taught to them. This can occur through methods such as observation, listening or through hands on learning. Some things that cause students to learn is staying focused because it helps them to understand and learn the content being introduced to them. Experiencing or going through certain things can also lead to learning. As a teacher I will encourage participation because this is another way for students to learn. As far as the classroom, I will do my best to make sure it is organized so that everything flows smoothly. Some strategies that I will implement in my class is the use of visuals and many other hands on activities. Since students learn differently they need to be provided with a variety of ways to learn. I will do my best to make my lessons interesting because this helps motivate students and engage them more in the learning process. Different types of technology will be used to help aid in the learning process. I will provide challenging assignments and will let my students work in groups so they can build social skills and also learn things from each other. Open discussions will be used because each student needs to feel comfortable sharing their ideas and among others in the class. In my class I will allow students to be involved in decision making regarding different assignments. I will use assessments to monitor my students learning and will provide prompt feedback on assignments. I will do this because I need to know if they are understanding and if not I can work on alternative ways to help them understand. What I hope to accomplish by using these strategies is that each student will be able to successfully learn to the best of their ability. It is my hope that all of their basic subject skills improve and they can leave the class with more knowledge than they came in with. I want my students to grow into the habit of loving to read along with learning. I want them to build critical thinking skills and encourage them that they can do anything if they believe, strive hard enough and put their minds to it. I want them to think of me as a positive role model and someone who they can always come talk to. My goal is to help guide them down the right path so that they can grow up and be responsible individuals and life long learners. Teacher-Learner Relationships Students have many responsibilities inside and outside of school. The most important role is for them to come to class ready to learn. They need to attend class daily because they will get behind and it is hard to catch up if they are constantly absent. Arriving on time is important because missing parts of the instruction can lead to not understanding the assignments. Students need to stay focused and on task so that test, classroom and homework assignments can be completed accurately and on time. Students need to come to class prepared and bring all the necessary supplies to class to do classroom assignments and projects. They are to participate in classroom discussions and activities. Teachers have many different roles in the classroom they lead, train and guide students. They are responsible for supplying students with the necessary information to help them learn the subject matter. They prepare lesson plans that is used as a guide to teach the students. They job is to set clear goals and expectations for their students so that there will be no misunderstanding. One of their main task is to focus on how their student is achieving. They supervise students and enforce rules for the classroom to make sure the students behave and treat each other with respect. They grade papers and meet with parents for teacher conferences to provide progress on their children. They make sure the class is a safe, nurturing environment for the students to learn. I think teachers must be role models for their students to follow and show them how they should act so this will follow them throughout their life inside and outside of school. Furthermore, they mentor and challenge students to become better learners and leaders for the future. Diversity When you have diverse students in your class and there always will be, it is really just a way of thinking that all students are different but in their own way. This could be due to their abilities, race, culture, background, belief or just by their personal differences. Thus, it is accurate to assert that all classrooms are a combination of diverse learners. If every student is unique, then every classroom is diverse. Even though students are different, teachers still are responsible for developing ways to meet each of their needs. Differentiated instruction can be used for diverse learners. Their content needs to be delivered in various ways such as through lectures, handouts, hands on activities, or even videos. Technology is also a good tool to use to help students learn. This enhances their learning because they can use it to build new skills and for practice. The important thing to remember is that they all learn differently because some are hands on learners while others may be auditory or visual. Teachers have to work hard to try and meet the needs of all their students. All students deserve the opportunity to learn and to be treated fairly no matter the differences. Teachers must have high expectations for all of their students and strive to help them reach their goals. Some students can adjust to a different environment quickly but it may be hard for some others to. Teachers face many challenges when providing instruction in a diverse classroom. This is why it is important for the teacher to remember when planning activities for the students to consider all their differences such as their background or culture. Of all of these factors, the personal and academic relationships between teachers and their students may be the most influential. Teacher Vision, This is where the teacher comes in and provide the upmost support to try and cater to the needs of the students.

4: Essay on Importance of Education for Children and Students

*Higher education has proved that it has a monetary value, as the salary of a person with a college education is higher than that of a person with a high school education. ### 5: Essay: The purpose and importance of a good education - Essay UK Free Essay Database

The Importance Of Higher Education Essay. The Importance of Higher Education | In the view of most Americans, a college education has now taken on the importance that a high school education had in the past, and has become a necessary ingredient for a good job and comfortable lifestyle.

Education Goals of higher education, university of my choice Living in the modern world, one cannot but face with a necessity of getting higher education. Thus, if you want to be a respected part of society, you are to have a degree. However there are a lot of people who tend to think that this kind of studies is not for them as school education is quite enough. Well, what are the goals of higher education? And do people really need it? So, what were the aims of all these people? Definitely, everybody is looking for the advantages one can take of it. And frankly speaking there are plenty of them. In my opinion, one of the most important goals of higher education is providing society with highly qualified manpower in order to strengthen particular sector of domestic and world economy as well as other spheres of social life. Hence graduates have more chances to get a well-paid job and higher position in the field he or she interested in. Secondly, being educated in a certain realm gives you an opportunity to become an expert in a wide range of problems. Consequently, another goal of higher education is cultural enlightenment. What is more, university or college really matters when we are talking about self-determination. Thus, it helps one to gain independence by realizing what he or she is good at. Sometimes school leavers enter higher education institution without knowing whether they really want to study this or that. However, with every passing year there, their desires become specified and they discover more and more opportunities to become useful for their local as well as world communities. Once I realized that higher education is vital for me, there was a problem what university to enter. However the number of universities offering studies in the field of international affairs in our country is quite limited and I had to choose between two cities, Volgograd where I was born and Samara that was quite near to my place. It is a classical multi-faculty university and a leading educational institution of higher education in the region. What is more important for me, it offers a great platform for students who are interested in carrying an individual research. Highly qualified scientific advisors are ready to help us and provide with essential literature whenever we need it. Moreover the conferences held in our university give the youth opportunity to be heard and noticed as a lot of experts visit them. All things considered, we can notice that all the goals of higher education are to improve the quality of life in this or that way. Although, a lot of people are aware of all these advantages they prefer to limit themselves with school education. And the only choice you should make is what university to enter but in no case to keep studying after school or not.

6: Pursuing a Higher Education Essay

" Higher education has taken on enormous importance for many Americans. Several in our focus groups reflected on the difference a college education " or the lack of one " had made in their own lives, while others spoke of the impact of higher education on the lives of their children.

Education Higher education is perceived as extremely important, and for most people a college education has become the necessary admission ticket to good jobs and a middle-class lifestyle. Parents of high school students place especially high importance on a college education, and African American and Hispanic parents give college an even higher priority than do white parents. All groups believe that the country should ensure that no qualified and motivated student is excluded from a college education because of the cost. Several in our focus groups reflected on the difference a college education " or the lack of one " had made in their own lives, while others spoke of the impact of higher education on the lives of their children. My husband did not go to college. He works for SEPTA [the local transit authority] and he has advanced in salary and promotions along the way, but he has always said he would have made so much more money if he did have his college degree. As a woman in our focus group in Old Bridge, New Jersey, said: When I was growing up what was important was to make the home front, with marriage and children, but today it is college. When people talk about higher education, they usually mention first the need for a college education as a necessary prerequisite for finding a good job. Several of our respondents spontaneously expressed concern that young people might be shortchanging themselves by taking high-paying jobs without getting the education they will need for the rest of their lives. But I wonder in a few years, will there be a time when that will change and we will let them go? Other studies have found that when respondents are asked to select the most important quality for success, they rate things such as hard work ahead of a college education. In our survey, however, a college education topped the list of responses when we asked people to choose the one thing that can most help a person succeed in the world today. Our respondents were by no means trapped by the stereotypical perception that higher education is only for year-olds. They know that people of all ages enroll in higher education, and many spoke with pride of their own achievements as adult learners and even of the achievements of their parents. As the following focus group comments suggest, however, when people think of higher education, they are most concerned with what happens to recent high school graduates. I generally think of the high school student as needing the college diploma to get a job, whereas the older person who has gone back probably already has a job, but may be looking for something better. Parents are convinced that college is a vital experience for their children. The market demands it. Before you could get a good job with a high school graduation. The future market is going to be asking for that. In focus groups, people frequently commented that there are not enough people who are learning well-paying trades such as plumbing, and they spoke favorably of the need for more trade schools. But, at the same time, trade school is not what most people want for their own children. They want their children not only to have a job with good pay, but also to have the kind of job and social standing that they see as following from a college education. Even More Important for Minorities Because Public Agenda conducted additional survey interviews and focus groups with African American and Hispanic parents of high school students, this study affords the unique opportunity to compare the attitudes of these two groups with white parents, as well as with the general public. A host of explanations have been offered as to why Hispanic and African American participation rates in higher education are lower than the population as a whole. Some have argued that higher rates of poverty in these groups make access to higher education more difficult; others suggest that predominantly black or Hispanic high schools are less successful in preparing students for college work. It is also sometimes suggested that members of these minority groups, compared to other populations, do not place as high a value on higher education. The findings from this study seem conclusively to eliminate this last reason. Higher education is important for all Americans, but it is especially important to African American and Hispanic parents, who are significantly more likely to emphasize higher education than either white parents or the population as a whole. The high value on college education is particularly clear when we ask people how important a college education is for success in later life. As Table 3 demonstrates, Hispanic parents are the most likely to assign high importance to higher education, followed by African American parents and then by white parents. When we ask the general public which factor is most important for success, no single factor commands majority support. The Hispanic response, in other words, is nearly double that of the population in general. This emphasis on college also surfaced in a focus group with African American parents in Chicago and in another with Hispanic parents in El Paso. The respondents frequently spoke of higher education as the key to economic and social mobility, and as one possible way to overcome the barriers of poverty and prejudice. Why is college important? Because we are black. It is the way that society is set up. These parents dispelled the notion that as immigrants, or children of immigrants, they were unaware of the importance of college education in American society. As one father in the group said: It did open doors. The difference between the views of Hispanic and African American parents versus white parents emerges even more sharply when we ask people whether it is possible to be successful in the workplace without a college education. Most white parents feel that although higher education is important, it is not absolutely necessary. Respondents in focus groups were quick to give examples of jobs where success does not depend on a college education. A man in Philadelphia talked about sales: Sales requires mostly an ability to sell. If you have an ability to sell you can go anywhere just as if you had a college degree, and you can make an enormous amount of money. When we interviewed Hispanic and African American parents, however, the picture changes substantially. As Table 4 shows, African American attitudes fall in between the views of the population as a whole and the strong position taken by Hispanic parents. A Gap Between Aspiration and Participation The emphasis that parents place on higher education becomes even more striking when we compare it to the actual participation rates of the various groups. As Table 5 shows, participation in higher education is lowest among Hispanics, somewhat higher among African Americans and highest among whites. Significantly, the value placed on college education is highest among those who have the lowest rates of participation. Hispanics, who have the lowest participation rates, are the most likely to stress the importance of higher education. The Societal Perspective In addition to viewing higher education as important for the individual, the people we interviewed also see higher education as important for society at large. The comments from focus groups help illustrate this conviction: A certain percentage of these college graduates are going to be running this country. These are the leaders of the country. This stands in contrast to what we saw in our first national survey in , just as the country was pulling out of a recession. However, there seems to be a shift in public sentiment, perhaps reflecting the dramatically expanding job prospects available to recent college graduates in , compared to the prospects of college graduates in . In , people in focus groups frequently talked of the problem of over-education, complete with stories about Ph. In , there was little mention of this, and people were much more likely to talk about the need for having educated people in the area to attract industries. The Importance of Opportunity Given the importance that people place on higher education, it is hardly surprising that they are equally concerned that everyone who is qualified and motivated has the opportunity to attend a college or university. Access to higher education, in the eyes of many people, is equivalent to access to the current version of the American dream. In effect, the public believes that providing people with opportunities for higher education is the way American society promotes social mobility. This value is shared by whites, African Americans and Hispanics.

7: Essay on higher education in america

Essay on Issues in Higher Education. keen understanding of what we have learned about these issues from students is the first step higher education leaders can take toward expanding opportunities for all students" (Choy, , p. 31).

People always ask me that very question. I might develop a complex or something. No, I think we simply have more questions than answers. Why does our year end in June or July, for some when the rest of the world thinks in terms of, you know, January to December? Why, when communicating externally, do we use jargon and buzzwords only we understand? Why do we aim to obfuscate and befuddle in the Orwellian tradition? Why do some believe academic freedom extends beyond the normal boundaries of free speech and, for that matter, decorum? Why do birds suddenly appear? Why are there no classes on Fridays? Why are there classes at 8 a. Why does the Big 12 have 10 members? Why does the Big Ten have 14? Why does the Big East consider Chicago east? Why do we hire experienced experts whose first order of business is to hire consultants? Why do fools fall in love? Why do adjuncts adjunct under such conditions? Why do students never read the syllabus until something goes wrong? Why do employees never read the employee manual until something goes wrong? Why do all mission statements sound the same and yet say nothing? Why do we still value seat time over competencies? Why do we conflate administrative experience with ability? Why do we need 22 assistant directors of admissions? Why is an appendix more valuable to a book than to a human body? Why do textbooks cost more than my first car? Why do textbooks depreciate faster than cars? Why do people post what they had for lunch on Facebook? Why do we respond? Why do we continue blaming rising costs on external regulations? Why do we need climbing walls? Why are the paved pathways across the quad never the shortest route? Why do people confuse deciding with doing?
