Retail Pharmacy I thought it would put in my 2 cents on the comparisons of working hospital vs. My rundown, on a personal level, of hospital vs. Hospital has just as many routine and repetitive tasks as retail, and hospital pharmacists deal with an array of drugs especially injectables that retail pharmacists never see. What the heck is that? But for some, these are the very reasons they want out of retail. It all depends on the job. These individuals can vary widely in their experience and general competence. Physician contact can be very satisfying. Some were burned out by it. Nurses are the key, though. If they learn to like you and trust you they will ask a ton of questions and you will learn a lot from that too. In retail, I kind of enjoy the autonomy. You might have an area supervisor, several middle managers, a clinical supervisor and a director of pharmacy. This can present the obvious difficulties see any "Dilbert" comic strip. Patient Contact -- This depends a lot on what job responsibilities you have in hospital. Generally, patient contact is less than retail of course. Routine Work -- Every job has its routine duties, hospital as much as retail. Unit dosing in hospitals is very labor intensive. Pharmacists will always be required to perform many of these duties -- advanced degree or not. Pay -- If you go from retail to hospital you will almost certainly take a pay cut, the extent of which can vary based on where you live and the job climate. Of course this goes for some retail outlets too. Evening shift was always understaffed for the amount of work we had, and often times I felt dumped on by the day shift. Flexible hours and scheduling can be nice, no question. It may be more of a factor at different times in your life, ie. The Working Conditions -- Hospitals can be depressing. Reading the charts of sick people can be depressing. You do need to have some detachment and that was sometimes hard. Maybe you have completed a specialized residency. I took it very seriously, and it bothered me to observe pharmacists with an over-blown sense of their own importance who walked into some of these areas with little background. To pull into a surface lot and walk into the front door was well, damn nice. In hospital I had to allow an extra minutes to circle the parking ramp for a spot and get myself into the department. I honestly felt like I was back in the land of the living, out in the world! In comparing hospital vs. I enjoyed hospital while I did it and learned a lot -- it just ran its course for me. I had a chance to work fewer evenings and weekends and I took it, and I also got tired of the top-heavy bureaucracy of hospital life. My transition to retail was made easier by working with some very knowledgeable technicians who really helped me till I got the hang of things. If I had gone to a retail store with high turnover and inexperience, it would have been much harder.

Teacher Guide how every man is summoned by Death because God desires a reckoning; how Friendship, Kindred and Goods refuse to accompany him on his journey; how Knowledge helps him strengthen Good Deeds to accompany him; how Beauty, Strength, and Five Wits desert him one by one as he approaches the grave; how Good Deeds alone accompanies him on his journey. Everyman is as fearful of dying as the rest of us. Worse than being a bogey-man, Death is businesslike and offers unarguable reasons why he cannot be bribed. When Everyman knows that the summons is inescapable, he turns in the wrong direction. He expects other people to save him. Friendship and Kindred are false friends who promise to accompany him on his journey; yet each forsakes him when they hear of his destination. Then Everyman goes even further afield, to Goods. He expects his worldly wealth to save him. Trust in other mortals is useless, but trust in Goods is damnable. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. Like Goods a nice touch of parallelism, Good Deeds is bound up, but for a different reason. Good Deeds is pitifully weak. Only if strengthened, can his Good Deeds save him. These friends -- parts of himself -- are more reliable than the earlier ones, and Everyman becomes hopeful and happy. But again, he must be disappointed: Beauty, Strength, Five Wits, and Knowledge will not pass with him through the grave. He expects his own physical properties to save him. Knowledge helps Everyman strengthen Good Deeds because when Everyman knows he has sinned, he has the Knowledge to repent. Ultimately only Good Deeds can accompany him for his reckoning. No federal laws regulate drug testing for private companies, but certain laws provide protections for workers. Federal Drug Laws Federal drug laws exist to control the use, manufacturing, possession, and distribution of various drugs that are legal and illegal. Federal agents focus mainly on trafficking. But state agencies make most arrests for drug offenses, and many of these arrests are for possession. But the Controlled Substances Act allows feds to enforce federal drug laws in any jurisdiction regardless of the laws of any state. It established a classification or scheduling system for drugs. Drugs are then categorized into 1 of 5 schedules: Schedule II drugs have a high potential for misuse and addiction, but they can be used in the United States with strict controls. Cocaine, PCP phencyclidine , methamphetamine, and opioids such as methadone, fentanyl, morphine, and hydrocodone are Schedule II substances. These drugs include codeine medications with aspirin or acetaminophen, anabolic steroids, and some barbiturates. Schedule IV drugs have a lower potential for misuse and psychological or physical dependence than those listed above and are currently accepted in medical use. They include the painkiller tramadol Ultram as well as benzodiazepines such as alprazolam Xanax , clonazepam Klonopin , and diazepam Valium. Schedule V drugs have an even lower potential for abuse or dependence, are accepted as legitimate medical treatments, and include cough medicines containing codeine. It also established mandatory minimum sentencing laws for federal drug trafficking, depending on the substance and amount in question. This act also addressed the differences between powdered and crack cocaine. For example, a person had to be caught with times more powdered cocaine than crack cocaine to receive the more severe minimum sentence the ratio was later reduced from About half of the federal prison population is serving time for drug offenses. Simple possession occurs when a person is caught with a small amount of an illegal substance for personal use. This offense carries heavier consequences. This term also applies to the illegal distribution of prescription drugs. However, various states have established laws and regulations for medicinal and even recreational use of marijuana.
