Primary Principles of Delivery a. In the disciplined process of exegesis, the preacher arrives at the truth; the most important component in delivery is clarityâ€”communicating the truth in a way it can be understood. How can that be accomplished? The style of communication should simply be an enlargement of your normal communication â€” or in other words, it should be natural. But every component such as volume, intensity, facial expressions, and gestures must be enlarged so that the person sitting at the back row gets the message. Delivery does not consist merely, or even chiefly, in vocalization and gesticulation, but it implies that one is possessed with the subject, that he is completely in sympathy with it and fully alive to its importance, that he is not repeating remembered words but setting free the thoughts shut up in his mind. The good and the evil in men of eminence are both of them mischievous when they become objects of servile imitation; the good when slavishly copied is exaggerated into formality, and the evil becomes wholly intolerable. If each teacher of others went himself to the school of our one only Master, a thousand errors might be avoided. The Early Years c. If a preacher expects his congregation to believe his message, it must be delivered with passion. Campbell Morgan argues that passion is an essential ingredient for an effective delivery. I present my fiction as though it were truth, you present your truth as though it were fictionâ€”I am not arguing for mere excitement. Painted fire never burns, and an imitated enthusiasm is the most empty thing that can possibly exist in a preacher. Given the preacher with a message. Away with all the mediocre, lifeless, boring, and lackluster orations offered as pitiful substitutes for the powerful Word of the living Lord. If that Word from God does not thrill the proclaimer and fill [him]. A true understanding and experience of the Truth must lead to this. A compelling messenger of the truth always speaks with authority. In fact, this is something Peter demands of anyone with a teaching gift 1 Peter 4: How do we demonstrate authority? The Specific Components of Delivery a. So we may have a completely different impression of our delivery than our congregation. That makes it crucial that we periodically assess the true condition of our delivery. How can we accomplish this? An audio assessment â€” several times a year, listen to an audio copy of one of your messages. A video assessment â€” occasionally record and review a video copy of one of your messages to assess the entire package. As you listen and view, assess the following areas:

Preaching without notes frees the preacher to unleash greater, more natural To preach a topical sermon without notes is a daunting task Charles W. Expository.

What Is An Expository Sermon? Expository sermons are constructed from a thorough investigation of a text or texts of Scripture. To put it another way, expository sermons simply explain the Scriptures or a passage of Scripture verse by verse. Usually, expository sermons are the means by which preachers teach through a book of the Bible. Though expository sermons explain the Scriptures verse by verse; nevertheless, it is still important to have structure to your sermon. You may decide to preach through the book of Romans. The first part of Romans is about sin and salvation. When you read Romans 1: First, you need to have the right heart 1: Your expository sermon now looks like this. There are three ways for sharing Christ with great enthusiasm. You need to have the right heart 1: How To Write An Expository Sermon You can write expository sermons from a deductive paradigm or an inductive paradigm. A deductive expository sermon begins with the main preaching point followed by the sermon sub-points and incidental points. There are three ways for sharing Christ with enthusiasm. Paul knew he belonged to Christ 1: You may want to preach the story of Abraham and Isaac inductively. The main preaching point in this story is that God wants you to put Him first in all things Genesis Your inductive expository sermon outline would look like this What happens when your stability in life is shattered? Bryan Chapell states that other types of preaching that proclaim biblical truth are certainly valid and valuable, but for the novice preacher and for a regular congregation diet no teaching type is more important than expository preaching. Definition by Charles W. Koller, you will see Koller discuss the importance of expositional preaching. Koller notes that expositional preaching can be delivered in three sermon types, expository, textual and topical. Koller notes that the expository sermon consist of exposition plus application and persuasion. The bulk of the material for the sermon is drawn directly from the passage and the sermon outline consists of a series of progressive ideas centered around the main idea" Braga Related Resources and Tips.

Two of Koller's popular texts, Expository Preaching without Notes and Sermons Preached without Notes, are combined in a single volume that allows preachers to prepare and deliver sermons without being tied to a manuscript or even outlines or notes.

How To Preach Without Notes does not mean preaching without preparation. In fact, preaching without notes requires carefully constructed notes that will give the preacher freedom to preach the Word of God to the people of God. Charles Koller was an influential preacher and a popular conference speaker. Charles Koller makes it absolutely clear that preaching without notes does not mean preaching without preparation. Charles Koller states that preaching without notes does not mean that there should be no notes on the pulpit. Preaching without notes is a technique when mastered will give you the freedom to preach the Word of God to the people of God without notes. Charles Koller simply explains the principles of homiletics that will enhance the preacher's ability to preach without notes. Charles Koller is not suggesting that preaching without notes is impromptu or extemporaneous preaching. In fact, impromptu or extemporaneous preaching is lazy preaching and often confusing to the congregation because it has no flow or cohesion. However, How To Preach Without Notes specifically teaches you how to prepare a sermon outline that will enable you to preach without notes. The preacher may be safely assured that when he has mastered the suggested techniques for getting an expository sermon out of the Bible, and setting it up for effective delivery without notes, he will have the techniques for preparing and delivering all other types of sermons as well. Occasionally a preacher, with or without training, will hit upon an excellent outline; but unless he understands just what he did, and how he did it, he will not be able to make such outlines come again two or three times every week. The principles are few and relatively simple, but are not commonly spelled out in the text books. Moreover, you must understand the applications of the homiletical devices that Dr. Charles Koller explains in chapter seven. However, there are several ways you can construct a sermon outline – deductively, inductively or a bit of both. How To Preach Without Notes is a book that every young preacher should read even if only to understand the homiletical devices in chapter seven. These homiletical devices will revolutionize your sermon preparation and teach the techniques to preach without notes. Every effort has been made to find the surest, simplest, most helpful procedures for effective expository preaching without notes. Gradually there have emerged certain proven principles, practical procedures, a basic homiletical pattern, and a streamlined system of notes for the easiest possible memorization, retention and recall. This book will help you put all that into practice so that you can preach without notes.
