Although he survived the prisoner of war camp , he died when the aeroplane returning him to Australia crashed in Manila Bay ; he was buried at Sai Wan War Cemetery in Hong Kong. James, who was an only child, was brought up by his mother, a factory worker, [4] in the Sydney suburbs of Kogarah and Jannali , living some years with his English maternal grandfather. At the university, he edited the student newspaper, Honi Soit , and directed the annual Union Revue. He graduated with a Bachelor of Arts with Honours in English in 1954. In early 1955, James moved to England, where he made his home. James later gained a place at Pembroke College , Cambridge , to read English literature. During one summer vacation, he worked as a circus roustabout to save enough money to travel to Italy. Having, he claims, scrupulously avoided reading any of the course material but having read widely otherwise in English and foreign literature , James graduated with a 2: Career[edit] Critic and essayist[edit] James became the television critic for The Observer in 1961, [4] remaining in the job until 1967. The Metropolitan Critic , his first collection of literary criticism, was followed by At the Pillars of Hercules , From the Land of Shadows , Snakecharmers in Texas , The Dreaming Swimmer , Even As We Speak , The Meaning of Recognition and Cultural Amnesia , a collection of miniature intellectual biographies of over significant figures in modern culture, history and politics. A defence of humanism , liberal democracy and literary clarity , the book was listed among the best of by The Village Voice. Another volume of essays, The Revolt of the Pendulum, was published in June 1967. He has also published Flying Visits, a collection of travel writing for The Observer. For many years, until mid-1960s, he wrote the weekly television critique page in the Review section of the Saturday edition of The Daily Telegraph. Poet and lyricist[edit] James has published several books of poetry, including Poem of the Year , a verse-diary, Other Passports: During the 1960s he also collaborated on six albums of songs with Pete Atkin: A revival of interest in the songs in the late 1960s, triggered largely by the creation by Steve Birkill of an Internet mailing list "Midnight Voices" in 1997, led to the reissue of the six albums on CD between 1997 and 2000, as well as live performances by the pair. A double album of previously unrecorded songs written in the seventies and entitled The Lakeside Sessions: Volumes 1 and 2 was released in 2000 and "Winter Spring", an album of new material written by James and Atkin was released in 2002. James acknowledged the importance of the "Midnight Voices" group in bringing to wider attention the lyric-writing aspect of his career. He wrote in November 2000, "That one of the midnight voices of my own fate should be the music of Pete Atkin continues to rank high among the blessings of my life". Novelist and memoirist[edit] In 1968 James published his first book of autobiography, Unreliable Memoirs , which recounted his early life in Australia and extended to over a hundred reprintings. It was followed by four other volumes of autobiography: Falling Towards England , which covered his London years; May Week Was in June , which dealt with his time at Cambridge ; North Face of Soho , and The Blaze of Obscurity , concerning his subsequent career as a television presenter. An omnibus edition of the first three volumes was published under the generic title of Always Unreliable. James has also written four novels: Brilliant Creatures , The Remake , Brrm! John Carey chose Unreliable Memoirs as one of the fifty most enjoyable books of the twentieth century in his book Pure Pleasure Television[edit] James developed his television career as a guest commentator on various shows, including as an occasional co-presenter with Tony Wilson on the first series of So It Goes , the Granada Television pop music show. With the aid of a radio microphone, I was able to shout them down, but it was a near thing After his defection to the BBC in 1971, he hosted a similarly-formatted programme called Saturday Night Clive " which initially screened on Saturday evening, returning as Saturday Night Clive on Sunday in its second series when it changed screening day and then Sunday Night Clive in its third and final series. In the mids, James featured in a travel programme called Clive James in This series dealt with the concept of "fame" in the 20th century, following over a course of eight episodes each one chronologically and roughly devoted to one decade of the century, from the 1910s to the 1990s discussions about world-famous people of the 20th century. In his closing monologue he remarked, "Achievement without fame can be a rewarding life, while fame without achievement is no life at all. James, who attended most F1 races during the s and is a friend of FOCA boss Bernie Ecclestone , added his own humour to the reviews which became popular with fans of the sport. Summing up the medium, he has said: In this programme James discussed various issues with a slightly humorous slant. Topics covered included media portrayal of torture, [13] young black role models [14] and corporate rebranding. Clive James , which features all sixty A Point of View programmes presented by James between and In addition to the poetry and prose of James himself, the site features the works of other literary figures such as Les Murray and Michael Frayn , as well as the works of painters, sculptors and photographers such as John Olsen and Jeffrey Smart. He took the latter show on a limited tour of the UK in He has received honorary doctorates from the Universities of Sydney and East Anglia. From Here to Eternity. James and Shaw have two daughters. In April , the Australian Channel Nine programme A Current Affair ran an item in which the former model Leanne Edelsten admitted to an eight-year affair with James beginning in He maintained a general policy of not talking about his family publicly, although he has made occasional self-deprecating comments in his various memoirs about some of his experiences of living in a house with three women. While critical of communism for its tendency towards totalitarianism , he still identifies with the left. In a interview in The Sunday Times, [27] James said of himself: But for some reason people did have difficulty in realising that it was economically illiterate too. He recorded in May Week Was in June his habit of filling a hubcap ashtray daily.
