1: Disney Family Feud Signature Game - Family Feud

INSTRUCTIONS OBJECT: To win the most money by matching the most popular survey answers. Each page in the book contains one complete game of Family Feud. One game.

At a bridal shower for my brother and his fiance, we played the classic game of Family Feud. Prep work took some time! But having questions related to the couple made the game more interesting and an opportunity for guests to learn about them. Guests had the option of playing as a family member or to simply be a member of the studio audience. We played the game just like the TV show minus the final round. A couple of our questions included: Something People Run For because this couple met when the bride-to-be was running and Top 9 Items to Take Camping this couple loves the outdoors. As to preparing the boards, yep, it takes some time. I put the answer covers on with poster puddy. It seemed the easiest. When we played this game at a church youth group night years ago, a techy volunteer created a computerized version of the game for us. Very cool if you can manage it. No big screen for us here, just an easel with the game boards. One thing you do need is a corny host. Yes, this is my husband wearing a blue leisure suit, some gold chains and a crazy wig. If only you could have seen him enthusiastically jogging in as the music blared and his name was announced, giving high fives to all family members. I love that man! Play then continue clockwise to the next team. Each team, in turn, places its mover on a purple. All of the blue cards have vague hints. Cloodle cards require a team member to draw on a piece of paper while the other team member s attempt to guess the word or phrase, much like Pictionary. Sensosketch cards work similarly, but require the drawer to have his eyes closed. Sculpturades requires one player to mold the included play- dough into shapes for the other player s to guess the word or phrase being sculpted. Data Head - These red cards revolve around knowledge of data and facts. Star Performer - These green cards are themed around: Acting out clues with a vague hint such as in charades. Acting and speaking like a famous person or fictional character but without using proper names, as in doing impressions. Humming or whistling a popular tune to get your group to guess the song, such as with Hummdingers. Word Worm - These yellow cards are themed around words, spelling, and anagrams. Two types of spelling challenges and three types of cards are involved in this category. One type of spelling challenge. If the team is on a purple space as all teams are on the start space , they can choose the first card from any of the four categories. If they are on a colored space, the first card from the corresponding category is selected. If the team successfully completes the card they have chosen, the die is then rolled to determine what space the team moves to. Whether the activity is completed successfully or not, the turn always ends after one card. If the team completes an activity successfully before timer runs out, they roll the color- faced die and move to the next space of the color they roll, or to the next Planet Cranium space, whichever is closer. If they roll purple, they go to either the next purple space or the next Planet Cranium space, whichever is closer. Scenic Path and Fast Track. If they complete their first activity on a Planet Cranium space successfully before time runs out, they will take the inside fast track to the next Planet Cranium space. If they do not complete their first activity successfully, or if time runs out, they will not be able to take the fast track, and, when they do complete an activity successfully to get off the Planet Cranium space, they will have to take the longer scenic path to the next Planet Cranium space. When one of these cards is drawn, every team competes and has one of its members do the activity for them. Acting is to be performed in front of all the teams. Each team may guess the answer by looking at anyone performing. The same applies to sensosketches and cloodles. Whichever team gets it first gets to roll the die and move, and play continues with the team who the Club Cranium card was originally for. If no one guesses the answer before time runs out, no one moves and play continues with the team whose turn it was. If a team gets a Club Cranium card correct while on a Planet Cranium, they may move on the fast track if it was their first activity while on the Planet Cranium; if their first activity on a Planet Cranium is a Club Cranium and they do not win it, they still try for the fast track on their next turn. The only penalty for not getting a Club Cranium right is not being able to take an extra move. Before a team can go into Cranium Central, they must collect one card from each deck by moving around these spaces. When a team reaches the end of the path, they must place their mover on the black space that with the deck name that corresponds to the color of their roll. If they roll purple, they may decide which black space to start on. They continue play in the normal fashion, except that when they complete an activity successfully, they keep the card, and instead of rolling the die, they move clockwise to the next black space. Once the team has a card from each deck, they may move into Cranium Central. Once they are in Cranium Central, on their turn, they will receive an activity from the deck that the other teams decide on. If they do not complete the activity successfully, they must wait until their next turn, when the other teams will pick another activity for them, either from the same deck or another deck. Once the team successfully completes an activity while in Cranium Central, they have won the game. Incorporates a musical timer and magnetic drawing pad. Activities comprise a mixture of some from the original game and new games better suited for a video game environment. Players start by drawing a caption card from the deck and must draw the caption, then pass to another player who captions what they believe the other person has drawn, then draw said caption. Winners correctly guess which drawing started as their own. Cranium The Family Fun Game:

Cardinal Games' Family Feud Disney Edition is designed for three or more players. The object of the game is to have the most points at the end by matching the most popular survey answers.

If neither competitor gets a correct answer on the survey the first time, just have the two players keep taking turns until one of them gets a survey answer. If the first person to answer gets the top answer first, their team immediately controls the board without getting an answer from the second player. In this case, Team 2 would be lucky because the first responses already covered two of the six answers. Each team member must try to guess another survey answer on the board. Their total for the round would be If the team gets three strikes but all the answers are not yet uncovered, the opposing team has a chance to steal. They can talk together and guess once for one of the remaining answers. If they get one, they win all the points from the round. If not, the first team wins and gets the points by default. If you have enough help, I would assign someone besides the host to keep track of adding up the score. He and his wife hi, Tara! The answers to the other 21 questions are in the Excel file below. I think 9 rounds is more than enough for a good, long game. You could also use these answers to set up a black board with some construction paper and play this game totally low tech. Chris adapted a Family Feud template download the original template for free here and his version is available below with 9 complete rounds. Others have been nearly impossible! It might be easiest to hold up a microphone to your laptop. The basic layout should probably look something like this: Here are a few more ideas to get you started on your script. Okay, is everyone ready? I made it myself, so it is free for your use. I think it looks like a blast.
