Fifty is the New Fifty is an online blog that covers topics such as lifestyle, fashion, beauty, health, fitness, and middle-aged musings. Our audience ranges from the ages of late forties to early sixties.

It happens to everyone and we can all relate. Close friends from our childhood are long gone and that great bunch of friends that we knew in high school or college are lost. Some of us also have had friendships dissolve due to disagreements or misunderstandings. The fact of the matter is most friendships never die, they just fade away. Propinquity is the frequency or the number of times we encounter someone. When we were younger our friendships were often formed at school where we saw certain people on a daily basis. This frequency of encounters often builds fundamental familiarity and trust. Eventually you might introduce yourself and as you get to know each other a bond will often develop. Proximity is the physical distance between two people. Many of us became friends with the boy or girl who lived next door to our house for the simple reason that they were close by. Why old friendships fade away If you understand the factors of propinquity and proximity you can start to see how some situations will cause a friendship to fade. When we all graduated from high school or college many of our friends returned to their homes which could have been hundreds of miles away. We try to stay in touch but over time the frequency of those connections decreases. Also, whenever we change jobs the friendships at our old place of employment can also fade. We may try to stay in touch but certain other factors begin to affect our ability to maintain the friendship. How age and change of life affects friendships As we grow and mature, our lives change. We move to new places, get married, have kids and pursue careers all of which demand more and more of our time. It also forces us to prioritize and that includes our relationships. The result is that the number of friends we once had begins to decline. There are also factors related to those friends that affect the quality of the friendship. If our old college friend moves a thousand miles away it may decrease the level of interaction we have with them on a regular basis. Once again, propinquity and proximity come into play. Steps to renewing a friendship There are steps to renewing a friendship but a lot of it has to do with why the friendship faded in the first place. Was it as simple as changing jobs or moving far away? Was it due to a disagreement or misunderstanding? Was it because of time constraints due to family or work-related issues? Did the other just fall off the face of the Earth and not try to reconnect? Regardless of the reason, there are ways to renew the friendship but the nature of the past relationship is important to keep in mind. Here are some key steps to reconnecting and renewing a friendship with someone: This can be simple or very complicated. It all depends on their location and their last name. You can also use Facebook, LinkedIn and Google to find someone. There are also services that can help you find someone but be careful, some are scams and some will charge you for the search. How you contact them is directly related to why the friendship faded. If it was a contentious end to the relationship, walk and talk softly. Talking with an old friend is better than random Facebook posts and occasional emails. Let them hear your voice and enjoy hearing their voice again. One of the keys to reconnecting with an old friend is the laughter and fun of remembering shared experiences from the past. Ask about new times. Tell them your story first, briefly and then ask what they are up to these days. This is why most of us want to reconnect with old friends and rekindle the relationship. This could be as simple as agreeing to call each other once a month or if you are in close proximity, meeting for coffee, lunch or a cocktail. The idea is to keep the connection going. You may find the relationship fades away again in spite of your best efforts. This whole process can be easy and renewing or challenging. Who knows, it can turn into a whole new friendship that will last us all for the rest of our lives.

Meanwhile, Ana is introduced to her new personal security team. Christian surprises Ana with a new house and has hired an attractive architect, Gia Matteo, to rebuild it. Ana privately threatens to fire Gia if she continues her flirting, forcing her to stop. When Christian is away on a business trip, Ana disregards his wishes that she stay at home, and meets her friend, Kate Kavanagh, for a drink. When Ana returns home, she encounters Jack Hyde, who attempts to kidnap her. After an argument with Christian about her night out with Kate, Ana berates Christian for being overly controlling and possessive and demands more freedom. Elliott proposes to Kate, who accepts. It is revealed that Gia was only helping Elliott choose the ring. The newlyweds continue with their erotic sexual experimentation, but matters become complicated when Ana announces she is pregnant. Christian is deeply disturbed, saying he had other plans for their early years together. He leaves, going on a night-long drunken bender. She becomes angry with Christian and locks herself in the playroom for the night. Christian searches for Ana in the morning and they continue arguing with Ana telling Christian how important the baby is for her. He warns Ana to tell no one and to bring the money alone. Ana takes some money and a revolver from the house safe, then goes to the bank to withdraw the full amount. The suspicious bank manager calls Christian. Hyde instructs Ana to get into a car parked in the alley and to hand over her phone to the driver to discard. Ana arrives at the drop-off site with the money. Hyde, psychotic and vengeful, attacks Ana and kicks her abdomen. Liz tries to stop Jack as Ana pulls out the revolver and shoots Hyde in the leg. Ana awakens three days later in the hospital with Christian at her side. Ana returns home the next day. Hyde was vengeful over Christian being adopted by the wealthy Grey family instead of him. It is also learned that Hyde blackmailed Liz into being his accomplice. They visit her grave and Christian lays flowers on it. Eight months later, Christian and Ana have a son named Theodore and a year later Ana is pregnant with their second child.
