On February 10th, Van Halen released their debut album. Rock and Roll would never be the same again. With Jaw-dropping guitar riffs, mind-bending solos, undeniable hooks and fist-pumping choruses the album delivered on an all-out assault on the ears. Four decades later the album remains the favorite among long-time Van Halen fans while inspiring a whole new generation of rockers. In August of this album was officially certified Diamond by the RIAA meaning it eclipsed the ten million sales mark and it continues to sell. This album is guitars, drums, bass and vocals. It was nothing like the classic winged logo Van Halen fans have come to love and cherish. Van Halen Mystery Theater Act 1 Van Halen is a band shrouded in mystery, even in a time when social media gives public figures few places to hide. That has both frustrated fans and intrigued them. For their press bio Roth convinced his bandmates to shave two years off of their age to seem younger. As if they even needed to do that. They were cool as not no matter what their actual age. David Lee Roth as featured on the back of the album. It set the tone early on that this was not just your average ordinary rock band. I can feel the February cold thawing already. And now the nod to the aforementioned Frankenstrat. Nothing cheap about the way it sounded. Edward The Mad Scientist Edward Van Halen not only pieced together his own Frankstrat guitar, he also did some truly innovative things with it. That pulsating solar-powered sound was created using a Univox EC echo unit that Eddie housed in an old WWI practice bomb he picked up from a junkyard. His whisky-soaked, raspy voice fits in just right with the groove of the song. Roth would often say in interviews at the time of this album that Van Halen was the sound of the 80s and was he right. Guitar World said it best: The first time I heard this track I had no idea what Edward was doing with his guitar and how he was doing it. It turns out that that scratchy-sounding riff was done by Edward rubbing his hand back and forth across the strings while stepping on a phase pedal to give it extra reverb. Ah yes, the mad scientist at work. There Are No Rules You would think that an unknown band would play it safe on their first album. Why take chances right? How about adding some barber shop vocals to a hard rock song? Bop bada, shoobe doo wah! It would give the band particularly their camera friendly front man David Lee Roth the creative spark for future videos to come which would come in handy with a brand new T. Grab Your Sonic Surfboards! This is just a warm-up to an even better Diamond Dave lyric, however. Hard rock is all about bone-chilling high notes and David Lee Roth had one of the best high-note screams in the biz. How many kids have dressed up like David Lee Roth for Halloween? I think you get my point but, just in case you need an example, take Billy Joe of Green Day. He once said one of the first songs he learned to play was a Van Halen song. Green Day fans your welcome. It looked like a Danelectro. It just sounded like a buzzy-fretted guitar. That thing was real bizarre. He wrote the song as a punk rock parody, a way to poke fun at the emerging punk rock bands of the late 70s. I guess you could say Edward had the last laugh. Think about it; a song written in one day has been played on radio stations pretty much everywhere every day for the last 40 years. Van Halen Nation had officially begun. He was known for producing Doobie Brothers records when he witnessed Van Halen playing in a club. Immediately he knew there was something special but he also knew that there were no guarantees when it came to capturing that live vibe on tape. David Lee Roth put down the cigarettes and booze for a day before recording his vocals thinking a smoother delivery was the way to go. Disappointed in the results, Templeman had Dave go back to the formula that worked. Dave smoked a doobie pun intended, downed a soda and a cheeseburger and proceeded to nail his vocals in the next take. It has become almost as familiar as the song itself. The flavor of that sundae? Jump to the 8: The song was written and performed by a blues artist named John Brim back in The song was introduced to David Lee Roth by a high school friend whose parents had the 45 record. Soon after Dave was playing it at backyard parties in Pasadena. Not too long after that he would be playing it in arenas around the world. Now there was no mistaking who recorded this song before Van Halen. The Kinks had made it a hit back in but Van Halen injected some rock and roll steroids into their version. It became the song responsible for breaking the band into the big time. He played it for Barry Brandt, the drummer of a rival band called Angel, in late Ted Templeman and Warner Bros. The single took off quickly rising into the top 40 and Van Halen never looked back. What if Angel released it first? Nowadays you can digitally simulate any sound you want for added effect but back in the late 70s it was a different story. With a shoestring budget these guys would have to get creative if they wanted to go beyond the sound of their instruments. Early on religious organizations accused the lyrics of promoting the devil himself. The lyrics have nothing to do with Satan. Those iconic wails would become as popular as the song itself years later thanks to the advent of the internet. They were even recently used in an Acura car commercial. It was and still is all about the song as a whole and Edward has come through time and time again with classic riffs. Pick any track you want, any day of the week, any time of day. Legendary rock artists were starting to infuse disco in their music just to get radio airplay. Then comes along this band out of Pasadena who flew in the face of musical trends and defiantly worked their way to the top of the rock heap. Few bands could cause such a seismic shift in the music scene, Van Halen was one of them. They sweetened up the crunching guitar riffs perfectly providing just the right balance of sweet and salt. A fairly simple name given to a man who was anything but simple. The stage swagger, the toe-touching leaps, the between-song banter. He was part rock star, part superhero. Just like Edward Van Halen inspired so many guitarists who would follow, David Lee inspired a generation of front men. Templeman insisted that Edward record it for the album and the rest is rock and roll history. Long live King Edward!

Yep, I just went over the hill! It was a special day to say the least. I was honored to be blessed and encouraged by so many on my 40th birthday. My birthday is special in that I have a twin brother, Kenny, who also celebrates his 40th as well. I enjoyed reading messages sent to him on Facebook. God is so good! But, one of the greatest gifts I received, and will never forget, was from my children. Inspired by the list I gave my dad on his 70th Birthday of 70 things on how he made his mark on me, my children made me a list: I felt led to share them with you so that you would continue to lift me up in prayer because I want add to that list! You let us play on the iPad. You take us to games. You take care of us no matter what. You take us hunting. You teach us our siblings are our best friends. You comfort us when we are scared. You give us a piece of gum. You teach us to forgive. You give us sweet drinks. You tell us stories about when you were little. You always try to make us smile. You taught us to take the fish off the hook. You read us the Bible after supper. You let us pick where we want to eat on our birthday. You taught us that there are 4 quarters in a football game. You got us into watching the Andy Griffith show. You taught us you have to have sunflower seeds at a baseball game. You taught us how to play football. You baptized some of us. You pull our teeth. You like to wrestle with us. You let us help you work. You take us fishing. You taught us how to shoot a gun. You make funny faces. You love and honor mama. You are an expert on the computer. You loooove to dance! You taught us how to shoot a bow and arrow. You make mama laugh. You like to have fun. You dance with us. You taught most of us how to ride our bike. You love your wife and children. You teach us how to catch a lizard. You like to be happy. You are an amazing dad. You are a very godly man. Happy 40th Birthday Daddy.

We need real life social connections. You see, that was my biggest problem. In fact, I spent so much time writing that I neglected to keep up with my social skills with real, live people. This left me in a real bind a couple years ago, when I ended a long term relationship with a woman I thought I was in love with. So, when things went sour in our relationship and I decided it was time to end it, it seems I also lost an entire network of mostly her friends as well. Who needs superficial friendships like that anyway, am I right? I thought so in the beginning but soon after, for the first time in my life, I felt empty. That emptiness led to depression, which then fueled thousands of words of emotional sap. Most of what I had written in that state of mind ended up in a dark romantic comedy screenplay. My own words and the characters I brought to life on paper seemed to disperse the feelings of emptiness and bring me out of my temporary funk. I did have a few family members living nearby. And many of my oldest high school friends lived about an hour north of me. We met up a couple weekends and reminisced and as much as we talked about getting together on a regular basis, we were pretty much left with communicating on Facebook. The reality that we all avoided was that unless there was a major event like a reunion, a wedding, and unfortunately a funeral, Facebook would remain our primary source of socializing. Nobody can drag you, you have to take the steps yourself. Source Make it Happen So, how does a reclusive writer in his forties find and meet new friends? I may have made up that quote in the first paragraph but I firmly believe in the Law of Attraction. Acting on the belief that Like attracts Like, I made a list of the top ten things that I like. My list included the obvious things, such as: It also included some things that I enjoy but wish I had more time for, such as: Putting It All Together Still wondering how a list of things I like is supposed to help me find new friends? You see, as soon as I created the list, I set the universe in motion. I was using the positive force of the universe to attract everything on my list. The only thing left for me to do now was to recognize when the connections were complete and then act on them. As she is the top expert on the Law of Attraction, I highly recommend that you read what she teaches on the subject. It was an email, that I almost deleted, which contained a connection to the second item on my list. It was an advertisement from a website called LivingSocial that was offering a tour of 5 local brew pubs and included samples of each of their craft beers and a discussion session with their brew masters. Err, I mean, Even better, because it is where I met Lisa and Stacy, a pair of true craft beer aficionados Almost immediately I started to find groups and events on Craigslist and Meetup. A year and a half after my break up, I connected with a fantastic woman on Match. Go make a list and let the universe help you forge some new friendships.
