Personal Reaction: Free at Last: The Story of Martin Luther King, Jr. was a very detailed and informative book but still be great at holding children's attention and keeping them engaged. I really liked this book because of how concise it was; it got to the point, presented the most important and.

I think this would be a great book to read aloud to a class grades 4th through 6th. This would be a great book to read for Martin Luther King day. The teacher could do a little lesson on who King is and then could read this book, or just certain parts of the book. The illustrations will be beneficial when reading aloud because they will be able to see pictures as well as listen. The teacher could then do an activity to wrap up the lesson. The teacher could also go over the additional information on the sides of the pages. This book also has a rich vocabulary. There are many new terms in this book that students would be likely to not know yet. This would be a great opportunity for the teacher to go over unfamiliar words while reading aloud as well as explaining new terms. There is information about certain wars in this book, so teachers could give a brief explanation of the wars discussed as well. All in all, this is a great book about Martin Luther King Jr. He got that name after he got baptized by his father which is also a pastor. I also loved this book because it informs me on not only Martin Luther King Jr. For example Abraham Lincoln signed the Emancipation proclamation in 1863. I found all this information on pages 10-11. Gutner would like this book if she likes informational books. I also believe that Ms. Gutner would like it because it was very informational. Gutner would like this book because she is a great social studies teacher. And also I usually see her reading large informational books. One challenge that I have is keeping track of all the settings. Martin Luther King Jr is a powerful, also unstoppable man. I know this because in the text it says Martin Luther King Jr got arrested a total of 16 times just for protesting.
