Originally written by two-time GMA Canada Covenant award winners Prosper & Melissa Laguerre, "Free to Live Again" is a song of inspiration, about the road towards cultural freedom in Canada, a message they say is especially important in today's political climate.

I was too busy. I might not enjoy it. The list went on and on, but I realized the last two were the big ones for me. I chronically avoid commitment because I associate that with hindering my freedom. What if I decide last-minute I want to go somewhere or do something else? Also, I hesitate to give large amounts of time to hobbies I have no intention of pursuing professionally. I realized last month, however, that I want to prioritize more of the things that make me feel passionate and excited—and not just occasionally, but regularly. Tell someone what you really want and need instead of building up resentment. Share your fears publicly, in a blog post for example, and ask the community to keep you accountable in overcoming them. Tell a friend your greatest dream, and then ask them to hold you accountable in pursuing it. Admit to a friend how you really feel about how you spend your time—then brainstorm about ways to improve it. Or tell your boss his or her services are no longer needed—then finally start pursuing your passion. Tell yourself the truth instead of lying to yourself about the changes you want to make in your life. Buy a new or used instrument and look on for instructional videos on YouTube. Write a blog post or take some photos and submit them to your favorite website. Nothing makes you feel alive like getting your blood pumping! Think of travel in that same way—and be resourceful to make it happen. Plan to go this weekend. Schedule at least two of them for the next month. Make a plan to do that thing. Create a positive affirmation to replace a limiting belief. Then use that new belief to push yourself out of your comfort zone. Now make it a personal mission to prove yourself wrong. Now shrink it down to something smaller but related. Everest could start with join a rock climbing gym. Do that smaller thing today. Ask a friend to describe your potential. Find the parts that make your heart race with excitement, and then take one small step today to work toward that possibility. Set a day challenge. Just putting it out there is a great start! But maybe you can pick just one thing that resonated with you, or pick one thing every week or month. The point is to do something to feel passionate, excited, and exhilarated. But we all have the ability to make at least one tiny change, or take at least one tiny risk. I feel terrified, but oh so thrilled and alive. What would give you that feeling?

Free to live again. 78 likes. Personal Blog. what I have learned from all of the difficulties in my own life is that human beings have very thick skin.

The intense hues of love flooded over me with extreme joy and happiness. Soon after meeting, we married and lived together for ten years. Yet, like rainbows and raindrops, our love evaporated and I took our divorce especially hard, soaking in self-pity and sadness while grieving for the past several years. After experiencing a painful breakup, you never, ever want to be in a relationship again. A broken heart and pained soul wants to give up on love altogether. Why put yourself through so much pain and suffering for a love that hurts and could end? Our hurt and tears clear the fog around our heart and illuminate the soul. There are plenty of obstacles keeping us from loving again. Let go of pain. You could avoid the pain for some time, but in order to move on you must fully embrace the pain. Embracing the pain means experiencing loss, sadness, and grief. As difficult as it might be, allow the tears to flow and share your experience with your friends and family. Instead of judging yourself harshly for your feelings, wash yourself in compassion for finding the strength to move through your pain. Let go of trespasses. When you break up, you feel like you want to blame everyone for causing your heartache. This includes not just your ex, but also their parents, your parents, their friends, your friends, and everyone in between. The only way to stop blaming others is to forgive them. No matter how grave the offense or how unacceptable their behavior, your healing starts when you let go of the gripe. Yes, it was unfair; yes, it was unjust; and yes, they did you wrong. Forgive people, because they, like us, have many imperfections. They know not what they do. Let go of bitterness. Remind yourself of their redeeming qualities. Let go of resentments. We let go of self-pity and resentments by being more grateful. Not only be thankful to your ex and the relationship you shared, but start living a life filled with gratefulness. Notice the small things and the big things that are constantly occurring around you. Appreciate the kind gesture, the words of encouragement, and the favorable circumstances that unfold in your life. Making a small gratitude list as you start or end the day can help you move from focusing on resentments to focusing on thankfulness. Let go comparing yourself to others. Once again, transform bitterness toward others to gratefulness that others have found love in their lives. If others have found love, let that be a message of hope and possibility for you. We are each on our own journeys to better understanding ourselves and loving better. Your day will come. Your broken love and loss are the seeds of true love. Let go of expectations. The way to be happy in and out of relationships is to let go of expectations and conditions. Be open to the magic of possibilities. Let go of resistance. Although love can be painful and heart-breaking, be willing to open your heart anyway. Be open to meeting new people, be open to being vulnerable, and be open to falling in love again. Set the intention for love to enter again. Let go of being tough. I know the feeling well. Seek to be your most honest self. Being vulnerable means being honest about your shortcomings and sharing your feelings. Let go of telling the same story over and over. You want to tell the same sad story repeatedly to friendsâ€”a love gone wrong, a love soured, a love that fell apart. There are many perspectives and stories in every relationship. Are you holding onto a story of resentment and bitterness? Are you willing to see a different story? Could the lost love have helped you grow? Heal some part of yourself? Learn about an open wound? Let go of fear. The way to let go of fear is to recognize and embrace it. How is fear holding you back? Is it keeping you stuck from living the life you want or the love you desire? Call fear out for what it is. What is the worst that can happen if this fear came true? How likely is it that this fear will come true? Have you overcome fears like this in your past? When you confront fear and acknowledge it for what it is, you can have an honest conversation with fear. Ultimately, a partner is a mirror and guide to help you complete the journey to your truest self. Even if you break up with them, they can be a conduit to healing and being made whole. Let go of your blocks keeping you from experiencing joy. Let go and choose love again.
