*Funniest Riddle Book in the World [Morrie Gallant, Remy Simard] on www.enganchecubano.com *FREE* shipping on qualifying offers. What a rocking riddle collection! There's simply no other that's so hilarious and covers so many topics and kids will have to be pretty darn smart to come up with the answers.*

Summary[ edit ] The sketch is framed in a documentary style and opens with Ernest Scribbler Michael Palin , a British "writer of jokes", creating the funniest joke in the world only to die laughing. His mother Eric Idle finds the joke, reads it and also immediately dies laughing. A brave Scotland Yard inspector Graham Chapman attempts to retrieve the joke, with the playing of very sombre music on gramophone records and the chanting of laments by fellow policemen to create a depressing mood. The inspector leaves the flat with the joke but also dies from laughter. The British Army wish to determine "the military potential of the Killer Joke". They then translate it into German , with each translator working on only one word of the joke for their own safety one translator saw two words of the joke and had to be hospitalised. The German "translation" in reality mostly just nonsense words is used for the first time on 8 July in the Ardennes , causing German soldiers to fall down dead from laughter: Beiherhund das Oder die Flipperwaldt gersput! The joke is then used in open warfare, with Tommies running through an open field amid artillery fire shouting the joke at the Germans, who die laughing in response. Afterward, a German field hospital is shown with uncontrollably laughing German soldiers in bandages, presumably having heard some parts of the joke. In a subsequent scene, a British officer from the Joke Brigade Palin has been taken prisoner and is being interrogated by Gestapo officers. The Germans attempt counter-jokes. For example, film is shown of Adolf Hitler supposedly saying "My dog has no nose", then a German soldier asking "How does he smell? The British joke is said to have been laid to rest when "Peace broke out" at the end of the war, and countries agree to a Joke Warfare ban at the Geneva Convention. Thus, the English version of the joke is never revealed to the audience. The section about 34 minutes into the film where Konstantin Hierl presents the Reich Labor Corps to Hitler is the source of the speech used for the joke. The first clip shows Hitler saying Inbesondere keiner mehr in Deutschland leben wird The original words are eure Schule, from "[The whole nation will go through] your school". The war-time story "Nothing But Gingerbread Left", by science fiction writer Henry Kuttner , has a very close premise. Rather than a joke, a marching song in German is used as a weapon against the German soldiers. Engineered by American linguists , it is by design such a catchy song that the soldiers cannot stop singing it, and eventually they can think of nothing else. At the climax, Adolf Hitler is ready to deliver a critically important speech, but begins chanting the marching song. For safety reasons, government agents somehow decided to keep the joke hidden in the protective custody of Abner Yokum. Meanwhile, comedian Bob Hope learns of the existence of this "Funniest Joke in the World", but not about its deadly effects, and decides that he wants to recite it on his next television show. He procures the joke from Abner, and the government agents learn of this development too late to prevent him from reading it on national television. It turns out, however, that before Bob Hope obtained the joke from him, Abner had read the joke, not understood it, and substituted his own favourite joke. It is this joke that Bob Hope reads on the air, to no harmful effect whatsoever.

Share5 Shares The riddle, in one form or another, has been around for centuries. Some of them rhyme, while others are just a few words. Collected below are 10 of the best, most popular, beloved, and challenging riddles from history. According to the legends, a man named Gestumblindi was about to be imprisoned by King Heidrek if he could not come up with riddles which would stump the king an interesting approach to law and order. Fearing for his life, Gestumblindi prayed to the Allfather, who answered him and disguised himself as Gestumblindi in order to trick the king. Odin told him a number of riddles , which the king answered, including this one: With a society dating as far back as B. It was first translated by E. Gordon in and is a great example of Sumerian culture and their views on life. There are two versions but the shorter, and more poetic, reads: One enters it blind and comes out seeing. Tolkien One of my favorite authors, J. Tolkien, was heavily influenced by Norse mythology and included a number of riddles in his writings. In his book The Hobbit, Bilbo Baggins has to defeat Gollum in a riddle competition in order to escape from a tunnel under the Misty Mountains. A number of riddles are asked back and forth until Bilbo finally asks a question Gollum is unable to answer. This is not that riddle that one is basically: The book was written in the 10th century and is most known for its anthology of Anglo-Saxon poetry. The author remains unknown but it was collected and donated by Leofric, the first bishop of Exeter. At the end of the book, there is a collection of nearly riddles, none of which have answers written. A number of them also seem to involve dirty puns and double entendres. Scholars have more or less agreed on the answers to many of them, trying to stay true to the humor and thinking of medieval Englishmen. During his travels around the island, Homer came upon some fishermen. He asked them how their day was going and they responded with this riddle: What did we keep? The riddle has taken many forms over the years, but the most popular version goes like this: You have died and are in limbo. There are two doors. One door leads to heaven and the other door leads to hell. There are two guardians, one by each door. One guardian always tells the truth and the other guardian always lies. What one question can you ask a guardian to find out which door leads to heaven? If I asked the other guardian which door leads to heaven, what would he tell me? In fact, tradition says he came up with it as a child. Einstein once famously opined that only 2 percent of the population would be able to solve it some people argue that he meant only 2 percent could do it in their head and that many more people could solve it on paper. The riddle is as follows: There are five houses, with five occupants, each with a different color house, different beverage of choice, different favorite brand of cigarette, and a unique pet. The goal is to figure out who owns the fish. Here is all the info you get: He was having a feast for some of his acquaintances when he decided to make a little wager. If his guests could answer the riddle, Samson would give them 30 articles of fine clothing. If they failed, they would have to do the same for him. They agreed, and Samson told them the following riddle: Bees making a honeycomb in the carcass of a lion he had killed. Because it can produce a few notes, though they are very flat; and it is never put with the wrong end in front! There are three gods on an island. One god always tells the truth and another always lies. Question 1 to any god: This question, regardless of the answer, will let you identify a god who is not Random, i. Question 2 to the god who is either True or False: Question 3 to the same god as the last question: From there, the remaining questions are relatively straightforward.
