The Gen X cohort was another year group, but the boomers had a year range and the silent generation an year range. Picking a cutoff year is complicated, of course, as groups change over time.

Getty Images The current workforce is largely comprised of three generations: The boomers are retirement-ready and the millennials are just getting warmed up. Today, many of us manage or lead teams of millennials. However, with an important mindset shift, we can save our careers and a lot of frustration. Believing that what got you here will get you there. Do good work and wait to be noticed. In a flatter, more fluid organization, you have to figure out what work you do well and find or create your own opportunities to do it. Clinging to the notion of "time in grade. Older generations believe putting in the years is essential to gaining the experience and perspective needed to lead. However, they obviously believe this because it puts them at an advantage. So, we fight about it. Today, the willingness to learn and take responsibility trumps "time in grade. Many of our more senior mentors and colleagues are retiring. Their "usefulness" to us is waning. To keep a full, relevant network, you need to be continuously refreshing your connections -- regardless of their age or current position. Avoiding emerging communication platforms. You then need to be selective about joining or not the conversations that matter most to your colleagues and customers. Dismissing the existence of racial biases in your organization or industry. We all have unconscious biases. You can actively take steps today to increase your future career and leadership opportunities. Failing to take action and change with the times will limit your professional future. Nov 15, More from Inc.

2: What is Generation X? (with pictures)

Gen X: Gen X was born between - and are currently between years old (82 million people in U.S.) Gen Y: Gen Y, or Millennials, were born between and They are currently between years old.

Tales for an Accelerated Culture. The term "Generation X" has been used at various times throughout history to describe alienated youth. In the s, Hungarian photographer Robert Capa used Generation X as the title for a photo-essay about young men and women growing up immediately following World War II. The "X" refers to an unknown variable or to a desire not to be defined. Research from MetLife , examining the boomers, split their cohort into "older boomers", which they defined as born between and , and "younger boomers", which they defined as born between and . They found much of the cultural identity of the baby-boomer generation is associated with the "older boomers", while half of the "younger boomers" were averse to being associated with the baby-boomer cohort and a third of those born between and actively identified as members of Generation X. Howe says that while many demographers use as a start date for Generation X, this is a statement about fertility in the population birth-rates which began declining in , declined more sharply following and fails to take into consideration the shared history and cultural identity of the individuals. Strauss and Howe define Generation X as those born between and .

How to Profit from the Coming Demographic Shift. Gen X , the "Gen X tribe" consisted of individuals born between and . At the time it was published they wrote that there are approximately . However, increased immigration partially offset declining birth rates and contributed to making Generation X an ethnically and culturally diverse demographic cohort. Abort, Retry, Ignore, Fail? Thomas also discussed how divorce was different during the Gen X childhood, with the child having a limited or severed relationship with one parent following divorce, often the father, due to differing societal and legal expectations. In the s, only 9 U. S states allowed for joint custody of children, which has since been adopted by all 50 states following a push for joint custody during the mids. Latchkey children became common among all socioeconomic demographics, but were particularly common among middle and upper class children. The higher the educational attainment of the parents, the higher the odds the children of this time would be latchkey children, due to increased maternal participation in the workforce at a time before childcare options outside the home were widely available. They were described in a marketing report by Specialty Retail as the kids who "lived the civil rights movement. One in five American children grew up in poverty during this time. These programs for the elderly were not tied to economic need. Congressman David Durenberger criticized this political situation, stating that while programs for poor children and for young families were cut, the government provided "free health care to elderly millionaires". Drug turf battles increased violent crime, and crack addiction impacted communities and families. Between and , the homicide rate for black males aged 14 to 17 doubled in the US, and the homicide rate for black males aged 18 to 24 increased almost as much. The crack epidemic had a destabilizing impact on families with an increase in the number of children in foster care. By , an estimated one to two million Americans were HIV positive. As the virus spread, at a time before effective treatments were available, a public panic ensued. Sex education programs in schools were adapted to address the AIDS epidemic which taught Gen X students that sex could kill you. A MetLife report noted: Such stereotypes prompted sociological research at Stanford University to study the accuracy of the characterization of Gen X young adults as cynical and disaffected. Using the national General Social Survey , the researchers compared answers to identical survey questions asked of 18-year-olds in three different time periods. Additionally, they compared how older adults answered the same survey questions over time. The surveys showed 18-year-old Gen Xers did exhibit higher levels of cynicism and disaffection than previous cohorts of 18-year-olds surveyed; however, they also found that cynicism and disaffection had increased among all age groups surveyed over time, not just young adults, making this a period effect, not a cohort effect. In other words, adults of all ages were more cynical and disaffected in the s, not just Generation X. In , The New York Times dubbed them "Generation ", describing them as the "once pitied but now envied group of self-employed workers whose income is reported to the Internal Revenue Service not on a W-2 form , but on Form ". The firefighters and police responding to the attacks were predominantly Generation Xers. Additionally, the leaders of the passenger revolt on United Airlines Flight 93 were predominantly Gen Xers. Google, Wikipedia, Amazon. In the book, Gordinier contrasts Gen Xers to Baby Boomers, saying Boomers tend to trumpet their accomplishments more than Gen Xers do, creating what he describes as "elaborate mythologies" around their achievements. Gordinier cites Steve Jobs as an example, while Gen Xers, he argues, are more likely to "just quietly do their thing". The study asked questions such as "Thinking about all aspects of your life, how happy are you? If zero means that you are very unhappy and 10 means that you are very happy, please rate your happiness. Only four percent of Generation X adults indicated a great deal of unhappiness a score of three or lower. Twenty-nine percent of Generation X adults were very happy with a score of 9 or 10 on the scale. Howe argues that Gen Xers are not helicopter parents, which Howe describes as a parenting style of Boomer parents of Millennials. Howe described Gen Xers instead as "stealth fighter parents", due to the tendency of Gen X parents to let minor issues go and to not hover over their children in the educational setting, but to intervene forcefully and swiftly in the event of more serious issues. The rankings were based on a three-year moving average between and Gen X was also ranked highest among fellow workers for having the strongest work ethic chosen by They were the first generation to experience the emergence of music videos as teenagers and are sometimes called the MTV Generation. Punk rock Punk rock or "punk" is a rock music genre developed in the mids in the United States, United Kingdom, and Australia. While influenced by the s garage rock and other styles of what is now referred to as "proto-punk" music, punk rock bands were rejecting the perceived excesses of mainstream s rock created by and largely for Baby Boomers. Punk bands typically produced short or fast-paced songs, with hard-edged melodies and singing styles, stripped-down instrumentation, and often political, anti-establishment lyrics. Punk embraces a DIY ethic; many bands self-produce recordings and distribute them through independent record labels and other informal channels that exemplifies the entrepreneurial traits the cohort would be credited with. While at first the bands were not Gen Xers themselves, the fan base for the early bands was increasingly Gen X and it therefore made a significant imprint on the cohort. As approached and the first Gen Xers were solidly in their teens, punk rock became a major and highly controversial cultural phenomenon in the United Kingdom. By the influence of punk rock music and subculture became more pervasive, spreading throughout various countries worldwide. It generally took root in local scenes that tended to reject affiliation with the mainstream. In the late s punk experienced its second wave in which acts that were not active during its formative years adopted the style, and Gen Xers were becoming the creators as well as the consumers. By the early s, faster and more aggressive subgenres such as hardcore punk e. Minor Threat, street punk e. Subhumans became the predominant modes of punk rock. Gen X musicians identifying with or inspired by punk often later pursued other musical directions, resulting in a broad range of spinoffs, giving rise to genres such as post-punk, new wave and later indie pop, alternative rock, and noise rock. By the s punk rock re-emerged in the mainstream, as punk rock and pop punk bands such as Green Day, Rancid, The Offspring, and Blink brought the genre widespread popularity. Grunge Nirvana singer Kurt Cobain pictured here in was called the "voice of Generation X", playing the same role for this demographic as Bob Dylan played for s youth and that John Lennon played for the baby boomers. Grunge song lyrics have been called the " In addition to lyrical self-glorification, hip hop was also used as a form of social protest. According to Rose Tricia, "In rap, relationships between black cultural practice, social and economic conditions, technology, sexual and racial politics, and the institution policing of the popular terrain are complex and in constant motion. Even though hip hop was used as a mechanism for different social issues it was still very complex with issues within the movement itself. Hip hop artists often talked about urban poverty and the problems of alcohol, drugs, and gangs in their communities. Smith is most known for his View Askewniverse films, the flagship film being Clerks, which is set in New Jersey circa, and focuses on two convenience-store clerks in their twenties. Is the American Dream Alive and Well? And as with male income, the trend is downward". Small businesses and the entrepreneurial spirit that Gen Xers embody have become one of the most popular institutions in America. As a result, Xers will spark a renaissance of entrepreneurship in economic life, even as overall confidence in economic institutions declines. Customers, and their needs and wants including Millennials will become the North Star for an entire new generation of entrepreneurs.

3: The Oldest Millennials Were Born in Are They Even Really Millennials?

You're in the sweet spot of Gen X, Tammie! !! is the explanation on why Gen X was/is the way it is regarding parenting; my husband and I have had multiple.

Tales for an Accelerated Culture," published in Those born after are considered Generation Z or post-millennial. In terms of size, Gen X numbers around 50 million, while both the Baby Boomers and the Millennials each have around 75 million members. Like the Silent Generation, Generation X has been defined as an "in-between" generation. In terms of social and political power, Generation X is sandwiched between the Baby Boomers, who came of age during the Vietnam and Reagan eras, and the Millennials of the Obama era. Gen X clients are busier than Baby Boomers and have less time to spend with their financial advisors. Gen X clients tend to be more self-directed than Boomer clients. Online reviews matter to 64 percent of Gen X investors versus 53 percent of Baby Boomers. The use of modern technology-based financial-planning tools is a key factor for 83 percent of Gen Xers versus 71 percent of Baby Boomers. Additionally, Gen X investors are much more likely to hold balanced funds, particularly target date funds, reflecting a desire to avoid risk. Many other Gen Xers are established professionals and entrepreneurs. A study by JP Morgan Asset Management found that Gen X is on track to become the first generation to be worse off in terms of being prepared for retirement than their parents. Only 24 percent expect Social Security to be their main source of retirement income. In contrast, millennials surveyed in the same poll stated that their No. But that average masks large variations: Of course, members of Gen X have, on average, been saving and investing for fewer years than Baby Boomers, which explains much of the disparity. However, Goldman cites other factors. Effects of Market Timing on Generation X On average, Gen X households began working, saving and investing during a period of lower investment returns than did the Baby Boomers. The cumulative return for the Baby Boomer would be approximately three times greater, despite the difference of only seven extra years of compounding. The effects of the ensuing bear markets still weigh heavily on their portfolios. The fact that this generation is supporting and educating children while also providing care for aging parents. Almost three-quarters of respondents plan to work after they retire from their official careers. Here are their top preferences: Instead of living in a retirement community or moving somewhere warm, they also are looking forward to a retirement that is more physically active and intellectually stimulating. Travel and relaxation are at the top of their retirement to-do list. Half say exercise will be a big priority and nearly a third see themselves taking on meaningful volunteer work during their retirement years. Financial Planning for Generation X The potential for financial duress can be substantial, but steps can be taken to reduce stress, balance budgets and mitigate the effects of unplanned life events. And because estate settlement can be an emotionally delicate process, doing this now can allow you and your family to think through how this should be done from a calm, logical perspective. Get a Comprehensive Financial Plan When you were in your 20s, managing your finances was a fairly simple matter of getting into good financial habits, such as saving and budgeting. This probably means that it is time to enlist a professional financial planner or financial advisor who can plug your cash flow, balance sheet, risk tolerance, investment objectives, time horizon and tax bracket into a sophisticated financial-planning program. Just be prepared to see some unpleasant numbers at the end, numbers that may indicate that you will not be able to retire as soon as you hoped. Manage Your Debt If you are thinking about buying a house, then you will probably be wise to look first at a year fixed-rate mortgage. If your debt load has become unmanageable, find one of the legitimate debt-management firms that will help you get it under control. Your kids can contribute to these funds as well as you, and money that you inherit from deceased parents or other relatives can also be college-funding sources. Get a Picture From Parents Conversations about money between parents and their children can be awkward, granted. Consult an eldercare attorney for advice if you need help dealing with managed-care issues and choose a designated sibling to be the point person for dealing with these matters. Have Returning Children Contribute The pressure of caring for aging parents can be multiplied by the expense of supporting grown children. It can also provide children with some life lessons in financial and fiscal responsibility.

4: Who Is Generation X? Posts for A Lost Generation

To understand Gen X, Viacom surveyed 12, people in 21 countries, collected 1, images through photo-journals, and hosted a series of intimate dinner discussions and ethnographic interviews in 8 countries.

Same as most here, I was the latchkey kid and the oldest who had lots of responsibility for my sibling early on. I look at my retirement as impossible. It took me 10 years out of college to begin making middle class money. Each time I applied for funding to go to school they told me SHE made too much money. I worked two jobs for years. Taco Bell and White Castle right across from each other. Then I worked my way through office jobs until I could finally attend school. When I look at long-term assets they talk about credit scores and all I have on my credit score is student loan debt but guess what? I have cash in the bank and no one seems to care when my credit score is low to average. The generation before us was largely consisting of narcissists who cared more about what their yard looked like than their mental health. What you all say is true. We were given narcissists as parents. They looked at us as insurance for someone to wipe their butt but never someone to nurture because requests were denied and responsibilities packed on due to their work and church duties. I hope she saved enough for her own care because I already cared for her mother while she worked too. Traditional sources including Markert and Coupland originally defined Generation X as Generation Y was There have been a few sources popping up as of recent that cuts the Gen X dates in half in order to beef up numbers for the millennials and the boomers. The key to a great life is to forget who has wronged you and focus on the people that are positive and honest. I graduated from university and did not get the job I wanted right out of the gate. I had a job that was not ideal but I know that it get me closer to where I want to go. Success is a journey and you have to decide what is right for you and not live up to ideals. There are limits, trade-offs, and you cannot have everything you want. My parents were technically Silents but the heck if they did not try to be Boomers. The smell of weed wafting into my bedroom late at night when they had friends over, falling asleep to the sounds of guitars. Ran into the Grey Ceiling as a new grad, could not relate to the Boomer - Yuppie thing, ended up not getting married until the mid 90s, first home purchase late 90s on the eve of the Dot Bomb. Thanks for your candor regarding your life and those things which make Gen X extremely resentful of the Boomers. My story is just like yours: When I was growing up, I was the older latch-key sibling providing free child care to my younger brother without thanks or even acknowledgment of how difficult that job was i. Again, there was no "thanks for doing your part, etc. Slave labor at its best, I guess. In college, I earned two B. So, what do I do? Just when I think things are going my way, I get fired in the most vile way false allegations of child abuse by my Boomer boss because I blew the whistle on her illegal discriminatory policies concerning double standards for male and female employees. Yet, she constantly complains and frets over having enough money. And here I am, unemployed for 2. We have done so much, for so long, with so little, we are now qualified to do anything with nothing. Sarcastic rant over and out. I try so hard to help everyone I come into contact with. I do get upset sometimes because the baby boomers will say, "I pay your salary" and "why should you get paid for helping me? Did you ever work for free? I do agree with previous postings about the older baby boomers sucking the system dry. The medical field is spending a fortune to keep people alive past what a normal life span allows. What a waste of resources. When it is truly my time, let me die! I was born Working is part of life. Um, going to work from 9 am-5 p. Your definition of "hard work" and my definition are worlds apart. So come see me. It was safe, secure and you had tenure? So I took a risk and started my own business. I should magically make money Oh, yeah. I remember, your generation did magically make money. I should always have the weekend off Oh, yeah. You always had the weekend off. Yes, I do think you are out of touch and self-centered. You have student loans? How did that happen? I thought you had a scholarship. I started school at a time when scholarships were limited to covering only certain things. They would not cover living expenses. And my scholarship only lasted for two years and was for a set amount of money. I earned my scholarship, by the way. I realize that grandma and grandpa helped you through college and paid for your education. But, you did not help me. When I turned 17 and went to college, you dropped me off at the university and let me fend for myself. When I called, saying I did not know how to pay for tuition, you told me to take out loans and that you would pay them one of many lies to come -- you have never helped me financially. I did not understand loans, or that it would haunt me to this day. I was on my own. So I figured it out. I learned for the first time what it was like to go hungry. I actually did walk miles in the snow during college to buy my food. By myself, as a female. I "figured" it out. You did not help me. You have also never gone hungry. My Dad does not my mom is deceased. My grandparents understand working six or seven days a week. Baby Boomer Dad does not. I have no patience for boomer Dad or any boomer lecturing me on "working hard". I work hard every day to prevent that. I also know you have never had this experience. When you divorced, your parents helped pay for the divorce, helped you buy food, and later bought you your first house after the divorce. They just gave it to you. When I lost my husband to a horrible disease, neither you nor mom helped me at all. I sold our house, rented a place in scary neighborhood on my own you told me I needed to do what I needed to do! I had zero help from my parents or anyone else. Grandma and grandpa came to visit me and see my first house. It took you almost a year to come see it. I keep in touch, and have never done anything to cause a rift between us. The fact is, you are lazy. It lowers my food bill and is another way to control expenses. My grandparents believe that it is the Christian thing to do to accept people of all walks of life. Gays, immigrants, other races, etc. My boomer Dad either hates them for being a parasite on society or thinks it makes him cool for supporting their movement. Everyone else ought to also completely ignoring circumstance -- another sign of laziness. And regarding gay people. And if around certain people, will easily slip back into hating the gays. But never around me.

That boom began to decline in and was further hastened by FDA approval of oral contraceptives in Please read A Nameless, Unlucky Generation. What Years Are Generation X? The years for Generation X vary among historians, government agencies and marketing firms. I pretty much stick to Neil Howe and the late William Strauss defined the generation in the broadest terms I have come across: They wrote this book, 13th Gen: Abort, Retry, Ignore, Fail? Another federal agency, the U. Department of Defense, sets the parameters at to Primarily, generations stem from shared experiences. Depending on your birth order, the area of the country where you grew up and other influences, you may identify with one generation more than another. That is perfectly fine. All of this is subjective. The entire body of individuals born and living at about the same timeâ€ The term of years, roughly 30 among human beings, accepted as the average period between the birth of parents and the birth of their offspring. A group of individuals, most of whom are the same approximate age, having similar ideas, problems, attitudes, etc. Compare Beat Generation, Lost Generation, etc. A group of individuals belonging to a specific category at the same timeâ€ Ultimately, opinions vary on when generations begin and end. You must decide for yourself where you belong. In my opinion, people should claim the generation whose collective persona most reflects their own life experiences. The age range for Generation X as of is 35 to 55 my broadest definition. In , the first Gen-Xer turned 50 years old and the youngest turned According to Douglas Coupland, author of Generation X: Tales of an Accelerated Culture, Generation X was born during the single most anti-child phase in American history. In the early s, the birth control pill became widely available, and in , abortion was legalized. Generation X is sandwiched between them with 46 million. This is expertly challenged, however, by the Census, which puts the total U. The following numbers are for everyone over These individuals collectively represent So, why do we hear that Generation X is so small when the numbers tell a different story? Characteristics of Generation X When it comes to generations, characteristics and traits are often referred to as the collective persona. Not everyone buys into generational theory and some accuse historians, marketers and social scientists of stereotyping people. I am not one of these people. That history began in A brief overview of the framework, however, may inspire you to check their book out of your local library. Basically, the historians maintain that generations fall into one of four archetypes and occur in one of four cycles that go on repeating themselves. The archetypes are prophet, nomad, hero, artist and the cycles are high, awakening, unraveling and crisis. Others may see it differently. With that, here are some of the stereotypical traits of Generation X. Keep in mind, much of this persona was fleshed out in the and 90s. The archetype of loner emerged. In reality, members, especially young men, were disenfranchised by a loss of familial support and later technology. In adulthood, the introspective, disconnected Gen-Xer has re-engaged through social media. In fact, the narratives are strikingly similar. Many Gen-Xers distrust authority and large institutions including corporations, religious institutions and the government.
