Pay Scales - Postal service pay scales Introduction Continued The Postal Service has lost revenue during the past few years however the good news is that the economy is recovering and revenues should increase as business returns to normal. Almost half of the work force will be eligible for retirement over the next decade opening up many opportunities for those seeking employment. Tens of thousands apply each year for post office jobs and those who understand the hiring process and study for entrance exams "when required" will dramatically improve their chances of landing a career with the USPS. The Postal Service never charges fees to take an exam or to apply for jobs. Thousands of post office jobs are filled annually for temporary casual positions, to backfill for retirements, transfers, deaths and to replace employees who choose to leave for other reasons. Special pay scales are used for rural letter carriers, city carriers, mail handlers and others. Mail processing, clerk, and delivery workers are initially hired as supplemental workers with temporary appointments and typically work 40 or more hours per week. The Postal Service also pays extra compensation, overtime, and night shift differential to post office job holders. There are a few differences. Postal workers do pay considerably less for health care benefits than do general schedule federal employees due to negotiated union contracts. US Postal workers can contribute to a K Thrift Savings Plan, purchase low cost life insurance and they receive generous holiday, vacation and sick leave allowances. This category includes security guards. Part-Time Flexible employees are scheduled to work fewer than 40 hours per week and they must be available for flexible work hours as assigned. Part-Time Flexible PS employees are paid by the hour. A Supplemental Work Force is needed by the Postal Service for peak mail periods and offers casual post office jobs for a day appointment or a 21 day appointment during the holiday season. College students may be considered for casual temporary US Postal jobs during the summer months. Tests are not required and appointments can not lead to a career position. Apply early for summer work. Contact offices in your area by no later than February for summer post office job applications. You can find information on USPS job qualifications and requirements here. The USPS is financially independent from the federal government, generating all its own revenues with no subsidies from American taxpayers. The postal service employs more U. One of the more popular jobs with the US Postal Service is the postal carrier. Delivers and collects mail on foot or by vehicle providing customer service in a prescribed area, outdoors in all types of weather. Carriers may be required to carry mailbags on their shoulders. A mailbag full of mail can weigh up to 35 pounds. Carriers have to load and unload trays and containers of mail and parcels weighing up to 70 pounds. Carrier duties require prolonged standing, walking, and reaching. After the mail has been processed and sorted, Postal Service mail carriers deliver mail, to residences and businesses in cities, towns, and rural areas. Carriers are classified as either city or rural, depending on their type of route, but both types share similar duties. In the early morning, mail carriers arrange their mail in delivery sequence at the Post Office. The mail carriers then travel established routes, delivering and collecting mail by either foot, vehicle or a combination of both. Mail carriers also collect money for postage-due and COD fees and obtain signed receipts for registered mail. At the end of their routes, mail carriers return to the post office and turn in their collected mail, receipts, and money collected during the day. Rural carriers perform similar duties to city carriers, but also provide a wider range of postal services such as selling stamps and registering parcels and letters. Post office jobs cover many different responsibilities, including: Other local post office jobs include corporate jobs, sales and marketing jobs, and information technology jobs. Postal jobs often have superior compensation and benefits. Benefits The benefits of Postal Service workers are similar to those enjoyed by Federal Government workers. Employees of the postal service are often members of various unions, such as:

When a job opens up in your post office or one of the three that you registered for during the exam, you will be first choice for the job, given that you are already trained. Tip Dress conservatively for the job interview.

Introduction Getting in is half the battle. If you are qualified in an occupation that currently has no openings, apply for positions that require the exam for entry level positions such as Postal Clerks and Mail Carriers to get in the door. You can also apply for related occupations that you meet the qualifications for. The Postal Service generally advertises jobs in-house first to offer qualified workers opportunities for advancement. You will have the opportunity to bid on other jobs if you have the qualifications and a good track record. Another option is to apply for supplemental work as a casual or transitional part time employee. The Postal Service hires many casual workers to assist with mail-delivery during peak periods, and hires transitional employees to backfill for career carrier positions. Many current employees started out as supplemental workers. Casuals can work two day employment terms and 21 days during the Christmas holiday each year and transitional employees can work up to one year to backfill for letter carriers. Also consider applying for rural carrier positions in your area. Supplemental workers earn a fair wage, and you will get exposure to what the Postal Service has to offer. These jobs are demanding and have flexible schedules and often require long hours on short notice. Hiring is needed each year to backfill for retirements, transfers, deaths and to replace employees who choose to leave for other reasons. Workers are initially hired under the part-time flexible pay scale and typically work 40 or more hours per week. The largest pay system in the Postal Service is predominantly for bargaining unit employees. Employee Classification Bargaining unit employees initial appointments are either casual or transitional temporary or Part-Time Flexible Career. Some positions are filled full-time such as the Maintenance Custodial classification. Corporate non-tested positions are classified differently. Click here for Corporate job information. This category includes security guards. Part-Time Flexible employees are scheduled to work fewer than 40 hours per week and they must be available for flexible work hours as assigned. Part-Time Flexible employees are paid by the hour. See page 15 for a complete pay scale listing. A Supplemental Work Force is needed by the Postal Service for peak mail periods and offers casual temporary employees two day employment terms in a calendar year. During Christmas an additional 21 days of employment can be offered to Supplemental Work Force employees. Transitional temporary employees can work up to days in carrier positions College students may be considered for casual temporary employment with the Postal Service during the summer months. Tests are not required and appointments can not lead to a career position. Apply early for summer work. Contact Post Offices in your area by no later than February for summer employment applications. This book is amazing. I studied for about three days and I ended up getting the job at the post office. I start Monday, thank you. Instead of applying to take a standardized exam for a specific occupation, you now apply for an actual job vacancy. Thousands apply yearly and their online application system collects background information, education, and work history when you first apply. This information is saved in your personal online profile and can be reused to apply for other jobs that you apply for. Previously, the Postal Service scheduled regional examinations for major occupational groups. Applicants who passed the exams with a score of 70 or higher were added in rank order to a hiring list for each area. These lists became outdated quickly as applicants found other employment, and it often took up to two years or longer before you were called for an interview, depending on when the Postal Service needed to hire and where you were on the list. Most positions, approximately 80 percent of all postal jobs, require passing a postal exam. Most tested positions are for city and rural carriers, mail processing specialists, mail handlers, sales, service, and distribution associates. There are also examinations for vehicle operators, mechanics, electronics technicians and others. A list of tested occupations is on page 23, and sample examinations are presented in Chapter Four of Post Office Jobs. Chapter Five includes a comprehensive study guide for the Postal Exam that is required for most mail handling positions. The remaining 20 percent of jobs, mostly corporate positions, do not require a written entrance exam. Your work experience, education and accomplishments are evaluated to rate you for positions. Postal Service is an Equal Opportunity Employer. Hiring and advancement in the Postal Service is based on qualifications and performance regardless of race, color, creed, religion, sex, age, national origin, or disability. Applicants must be U. The majority of positions require passing a postal exam. Corporate and professionals such as doctors, engineers, and others are employed through an application and interview process that is similar to the competitive federal civil service program. Postal installation managers are generally appointing officials and are delegated the authority to fill vacancies by transfer, reassignment, reinstatement of a former federal or postal employee, promotion, or from an entrance register of eligibles. Regardless of the recruitment source, the applicant must meet the qualifications of the position, including passing the appropriate examination. Examinations can be either written or a rated application process such as that used for corporate and professional positions.
