

1: The Girl Who Was Clairvoyant by Mignon Warner

Mignon Warner was born in Adelaide, South Australia. She now lives in Wainhouse Corner, Wales, Great Britain, with her husband Alan Warner who is a master craftsman of magic.

She was a premature baby who suffered from health complications. In accordance with local tradition, the baby was not given a name until it was deemed likely to survive. When the baby first cried out, a midwife went into the street and asked a stranger for a name. The stranger proposed Andromaha Andromache, but this was rejected for being "too Greek" during a period of anti-Hellenic sentiment within Bulgarian society. This left Vanga dependent on the care and charity of neighbours and close family friends for much of her youth. After the war, Strumica was annexed by Serbia. The Serbian authorities arrested the father, because of his pro-Bulgarian activity. They confiscated all his property and the family fell into poverty for many years. Her inclinations started to show up when she herself thought out games and loved playing "healing" – she prescribed some herbs to her friends, who pretended to be ill. Her father, being a widower, eventually remarried, thus providing a stepmother to his daughter. She was found after a long search. Witnesses described her as very frightened, and her eyes were covered with sand and dust, she was unable to open them because of the pain. There was money only for a partial operation to heal the injuries she had sustained. In Vanga was brought to a school for the blind in the city of Zemun, in the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, where she spent three years, and was taught to read Braille, play the piano, as well as do knitting, cooking, and cleaning. Her family was very poor, and she had to work all day. In Vanga contracted pleurisy, although it remained largely inactive for some years. At that time Vanga attracted believers in her ability to heal and soothsay – a number of people visited her, hoping to get a hint about whether their relatives were alive, or seeking for the place where they died. Shortly before marriage, Dimitar and Vanga moved to Petrich, where she soon became well-known. Dimitar was then conscripted in the Bulgarian Army and had to spend some time in Northern Greece, which was annexed by Bulgaria at the time. He got another illness in, fell into alcoholism, and eventually died on 1 April. After the Second World War, Bulgarian politicians and leaders from different Soviet Republics, including Soviet Premier Leonid Brezhnev, sought her counsel; [12] in the s, a church was built in Rupite by Bogdan Tomalevski with money left by her visitors. Vanga was semi-literate in Bulgarian, she could read some Braille in Serbian, as she learned in Zemun. She did not write any books herself. What she said or allegedly said had been captured by staff members. The meeting was unpleasant. Vanga only sat and stared out a window with her back to Silvana. She did not speak. After a long time, Vanga finally spoke: You do not have to pay. I do not want to speak with you. Go and come back in three months. In fact, you will not be able to come. If you can come back in three months, do so. One finalist was Brazil, but Bulgaria was eliminated by Italy in the semifinals. Followers of Vanga[ who? Amanda Meder As a now adult psychic medium, I identify with being a post-psychic child. I actually described my experiences to my parents this way - I would see things, in my bedroom at night, while I was awake. We called them nightmares you have while you are awake. You get the picture. Wishing they could tell me what was going on or why, many times, my back was rubbed, I was comforted and told simply to go back to sleep. Each time I experienced something, I tried hard to explain what I saw to my sisters, my mom and my brother and thankfully, I did have one person that believed me - my father. If you are reading this right now, you might be a parent of a psychic child - wondering, how can I best support my little girl or little boy? And I want to help - by sharing with you the three most important things I wished had been said to me when I was growing up as a little girl who saw ghosts. No one has that or can do that - even the most well-read and experienced psychic medium. So, without further ado - the most important things to say to your psychic child: Someone or a series of someones along the way saying things like this, can really shut down any psychic abilities that are developing: Go back to bed, it was just a dream. You close your eyes tightly night after night, hiding under your covers and hope to God you stop seeing these things. You beg for it to stop. And one day, it does. For a while anyway. Learn about my experience here. And just as your child can tell their cousin or little sister to get out of their room and stop playing with all their stuff - they can tell a Spirit to get out, too! Just as you would teach a child to stand up against a bully, you may also teach a child to tell a Spirit to get out of their space and leave them alone. They can tell people and things to leave them alone. No matter what - what your child is experiencing and believing they are experiencing is real and it is truth. If your child feels like no-one believes them, this can lead to feelings of isolation, loneliness and sadness. Just as you desire to have someone who shares your experience with you - everyone wishes for this. We all wish for someone to believe in our life, our path and our experience. You and I, we both want someone else to validate our experiences as real and worthy of acknowledgement. You have to really believe or understand or connect them with someone who does. If not, feelings of isolation can really set in. And remember, children and adults alike are experts at reading body language. Your body language must truthfully align with the words that you speak. In other words, if you say that you believe your child - make sure you do not say it unless you are prepared to say it with your whole being. Learn, read, and understand! Both of these statements must be spoken with honesty in your whole Spirit in order to fully be acknowledged and felt. The more you learn, the easier it is to understand. You know when someone needs a chance to talk or an opportunity to tell someone how they feel. Many times, when I was a child, I would hesitate to tell people what I saw, because over time, I learned that it scared people. Eventually, I opened back up and it was because someone, a friend, genuinely asked me what was wrong. He actually cared and deeply and honestly wanted to know. And I, deeply and honestly wanted to tell someone after all those years of hiding, too. Give your child a chance to share their experience with you, or with someone who may understand! By just integrating these phrases and practices into your life, you are helping your child feel more accepted, less alone and a place to be safe.

Clairvoyants can see energy fields, spirits, symbols and get visual premonitions. Whereas a clairsentient might look at your photo and pick up on your feelings and emotions, a clairvoyant would probably see your aura, the essence of your spirit and Spirit Guides or Angels around you. When reading a situation, a clairvoyant may see a symbol or a movie-scene which is a metaphor for the situation. Receiving clairvoyant images is one thing, but not all clairvoyants are gifted at interpreting what they see. To interpret a vision or symbol, you need to use your claircognizance or clairaudience as well. Clairaudience, Clairsentience, and Claircognizance. On the other hand, I felt really compelled to write about claircognizance and clairsentience because they are so common and the people who have these gifts often do not know that they even constitute gifts which can be developed. All the intuitive vehicles are meant to work together. On the other hand, most people need some clairsentience, to pick up vibes from people. I personally do not use clairvoyance in my work much. Flexing my clairvoyant muscles was the first thing I did when I started developing psychically. I picked up a good book called Psychic Development for Beginners by William Hewitt and began using his exercises to open up my third eye the exercise is below. I have to say that the below exercise opened up my third eye the centre of clairvoyant abilities quite spectacularly for a few days, then I got scared and shut it down again! I also saw coloured lights around people and I began to have really strange and vivid dreams, in colour. An Exercise for Developing Clairvoyance The exercise is this: Let the balloons go one by one, beginning with the red balloon. Watch them float up to the blue sky until they disappear before you release the next one. You may find it hard to concentrate or it may be difficult for you to visualize vividly or in colour “ it all depends on how developed your imagination muscles are. Any activity which uses your visual imagination is good for strengthening clairvoyant abilities, because your imagination is the tool that Spirit uses to send you information, in the form of images. Imagine a third eye, between your eyebrows. Visualize the eyelid on your third eye opening up. All visualization does is set an intention to do something. When you receive an image from Spirit, you are not in control. Blocks to Clairvoyance A few people who are natural clairvoyants never see any evidence of their gift. When this happens, it usually means there is a blockage or an energy leak at the third eye chakra. There are two reasons why I personally did not use to put much effort into developing my clairvoyant abilities further: When I was about five or six years old, I was playing in my bed late at night. I looked up and saw a woman standing in the corner of my room by the door, staring at me “ just writing about it gives me the creeps. I have never been more frightened in my life than at that moment. I remember my heart beating so fast that I thought it would burst! I think I decided at that point that seeing spirits sucked and it took a lot of time and some healing before my clairvoyance developed properly. A lot of people have a blockage like this, due to some sort of frightening psychic experience. If this applies to you and you can locate or remember what is blocking your third eye, use my angelic healing exercise method 3 in this article: Any general blocks to truth can also affect your clairvoyance and the overall state of your intuitive faculties. For example, if you live your life in a state of denial or falsehood, your clairvoyance will be weakened. If you kid yourself about something on a regular basis, it weakens your trust in your own perceptions and intuition and this will affect your clairvoyant abilities. Place a lapis lazuli or clear quartz crystal over your third eye chakra, or go into a crystal shop with the intention of finding the right crystal to help you to open up your third eye. You may feel really drawn to one crystal in particular which can help you.

Email Copy Link Copied There are many things in this world that we just cannot explain. One of these supernatural occurrences that cannot ever be scientifically proven are people who are said to possess psychic abilities. A psychic is a person who claims that they can use ESP to seek out hidden information. Psychics, or people who claim they are psychics, can use their abilities in a variety of ways. Some psychics perform on stage, others use their talents to talk to the dead, and some use their abilities to solve crimes. Psychic detectives use telepathy, dowsing, and remote viewing to get information about a case that another detective without psychic abilities would have difficulty obtaining. Although many people are skeptical about the legitimacy of psychic detectives, there have been a number of cases where psychics have undoubtedly helped bring a murderer to justice or even helped find a missing person. Below is a list of 10 crimes that were solved by psychics. The psychics in these crimes provided police with invaluable information that enabled the solving of the crime. So whether you believe in the power of psychics or not, here are 10 cases where psychics actually helped with an investigation. Eventually, the body was discovered by a truck driver less than two kilometers away from the area where the psychic had predicted it would be. The psychic also found the murder weapon lodged in a drainpipe. In addition, Malone told police that she felt like the murderer had walked through her as she entered the cabin and explained that this was an action only ghosts are able to do. While different searches were carried out to find the missing girl, clairvoyant Etta Smith decided that Uribe was not in an area where police were looking. Smith expressed that the victim was in a place like Lopez Valley, and near her home. Smith was detained and questioned but was later released after investigators caught the real killer. After a long search for Herbert and his three passengers, the search was called off. Herbert got in touch with psychic detective Noreen Renier from her ex-husband. This case provides another example in which police acknowledged that a psychic played a vital role in the solving of a mystery. The psychic also said that the number was important and that the girl was in water but had not drowned. In addition, Allison predicted that the young girl had been murdered by her boyfriend. This information allowed police to find and apprehend the murderer. When she joined the investigation, Myer told the family that Tonet was dead but that his death had not come out of violence. Myer explained that the year old Tonet had gone out for a walk in the forest when he became confused and lost. The man continued to wander further and further from his home until he met his death by either falling or laying down to rest. Myer told police that Tonet was actually much further away from where they had been looking. She used her senses to circle on a map where Tonet would be found. The body of Sylvester Tonet was found just yards from where Myer had her vision.
