

1: 5 Things I Learned By Dating A Girl From The ~Hood | Thought Catalog

ABC's Primetime news broadcast of girls in gangs. Cynthia McFadden reporting.

I personally enjoyed reading and listening to the vocabulary used by this author. I encourage young teenage females to read these types of books because it gives out knowledge for girls who are eager to learn about relationships and life in general. However, i can say that this book was not boring at all, it actually made me want to read it more and more. Hope you ladies read it and enjoy it like i did. Sep 19, Angell Johnson rated it it was amazing One word for this book I was able to read this book from cover to cover without putting it down. May 16, Redd Monroe rated it really liked it Yaya is all about money in life , especially with her best friend.. She does whatever she can to get money. Strip , trick , lick whatever. But when she meets indie her whole outlook on life changed.. And it made her want to change. And if you ask me she lost the best man she could ever manage to have.. Jada ends up killing a cop and getting sentenced to life.. So she has to talk to the doctor that deals with mental people.. Londa was so damn loyal to her friends and seemed like she always got shitted on. Blake is in the county locked up but him and Londa go way back. Then there is yazmine who she has been cool with since 4th grade. Girls From Da Hood 4 Synopsis: This is a book with three different stories in it. Mature Teen, Adult, Women Purpose:

2: 'Girl From The Hood' Movie Needs Cars, Buses, Extras | WVXU

Like its predecessors, Girls from da Hood 4 introduces you to women from the streets of Brooklyn who know how to be on that grind. In "Prada Plan," you meet Disaya Morgan. She is a person of meager beginnings who vowed never to be that way again.

July 2, The following is an ode to black girls who grew up in the ghetto. Black girls who stay in the beauty supply and seek refuge in the nail salon. Black girls who lay their edges with the utmost precision. Black girls who were carefree before it became an aesthetic. I write this to acknowledge you, to acknowledge us. I was seven years old when I realized that I lived in the projects. I went to a school that had decaying ceilings with mould exposed on every surface. On the way home, I would pass multimillion dollar houses only to enter a building with pests and addicts circling the corridor. By nature, we adapted familiar attitudes and behaviours. The sounds of our beads and bubbles bounced in a poetic harmony whenever we would play Double Dutch. They hung firmly onto our braids that touted intricate and complex designs. Despite our low economic status, stretching a dollar was something we did best. We overcompensated in every aspect, especially when it came to self-expression and creativity. I would watch her get dressed every morning as she slid each gold ring onto her finger. I worshipped her gaudy beauty practices that included sliding gold caps onto her teeth mixed with the heavy usage of black gel to get her finger waves and baby hair just right. Bottles of Pink Lotion and Blue Magic resided beside her bamboo earrings that proudly showcased her name. I idolized the use of her bold lipstick choices and eyelashes that dancehall queens would envy. Sooner than later I adopted the essential stylings of the ghetto. I always stayed with some sparkly, dollar. My most prized possession? An airbrushed tee that bestowed my nickname, a faux Louie V purse yes that rainbow coloured one in addition to my extensive collection of Chinese slippers from the dollar store. My desire to show up and show out was fulfilled every time I left my house and onto the catwalk in the projects. I witnessed creativity and innovation at every stop as I admired the men and women who were their true, authentic selves without interruption. Nameplate jewelry, nail art and colourful, synthetic wigs has cemented itself into pop culture without our identities being portrayed positively and certainly without reparations. In so many words, the ghetto has been repackaged and curated to appeal to the masses whilst replacing black femmes and dark skinned women with those who look racially ambiguous. Often times, the show-stopping hairstyles and outfits that are celebrated in the hood are seen as violations in the eyes of principals, employers and likeminded individuals who have suspended or isolated black girls for rightfully expressing themselves. On the flip side, it is seen as editorial or high fashion and renamed something more palatable when women from privileged backgrounds get a hold of them. Where are the collaborations? The following is used as a way to consume and participate in the hood without actively belonging to it. What was once looked at as tacky is now a staple for those who wanna be down. In addition, performative blackness has allowed non-black women to succeed while women from the ghetto are vilified for our existence. To sum it up, brands and numerous individuals have successfully gentrified the ghetto and continue to ignore the geniuses within it by refusing to pay homage until being called out via social media. Even then, it still falls incredibly short. Making the distinction and specifically centring black women who grew up in the projects is intentional. It is a way to acknowledge the innovators who broke the rules all the while defining themselves on their own terms. While black women as a whole share several experiences, black women who reside d in the ghetto have endured an egregious amount of respectability politics at the hands of black women and NBPOC who live d across the tracks. Girls who blast their music via their cellular devices on public transportation. Girls who run into the beauty supply with a headscarf on to get some pack hair for a quick weave. Girls who were carefree without flowers in their hair. Girls who would strut in bedazzled jeans and Baby Phat jackets in their prime. Girls who make cheap clothing from Rainbow or Urban Planet look top of the line. This is an ode to the black girls in the hood, the original trendsetters. Follow me on Twitter here. Photograph by Keith Major.

3: 5 lessons from growing up in the hood | Ed Latimore

Girls from Da Hood, Girls from Da Hood 2, Girls From Da Hood 3, Girls From Da Hood 4, Girls From Da Hood 5, Girls from da Hood 6, Girls From da Hood 7, Home My Books.

In fact, we moved to a worse public housing project called Northview Heights. I stayed there until I was 18, which is when I left for college. This image is from a recent news story about a kid who got shot in Northview Heights. I grew up a few blocks from that building. Some terminology for the uninformed masses. But not all hoods and ghettos are public housing projects. There are shitty neighborhoods all over the country. Housing projects tend to be the worst kind of ghetto — you gotta be a special kind of broke to live where the government subsidizes your rent and utilities. To me they all mean the same thing: The projects destroy the future of most people. The following is an effective but gross oversimplification: People promote ignorant ass values, have kids early, those kids get indoctrinated with the same ignorant values, and the cycle repeats itself for generations. Books have been written on this subject for decades. But I made it out. I could have gotten a girl pregnant as a teen, been arrested, or killed. I learned things from that environment which give me a significant advantage in civilized society. And the things I learned are very different from book learning. Good manners go a long way in the hood I fought a lot as a kid. Say something a little too offensive that gets guys in the mood to fight? While a guy might not have a gun, he might not care about catching an aggravated assault charge to defend his honor. This is assuming you call the cops, which everyone in the ghetto avoids: Fighting because someone feels disrespected makes you less likely to be disrespectful in the future. In the ghetto, safety and security is an illusion My house had doors and locks. When you grow up in the ghetto, you never feel safe. My mother kept food on the table, but her temper and physical abuse left me hurt as much as some street fights. I never got comfortable thinking there was such a thing as safety. The guy who robbed me looked a little like this I remember some kids broke into my locker one day in the dead of winter and put my coat in the toilet. When I was 11, I got robbed by a crackhead at knife point for a calzone. There were many other incidents like these. Point is, I internalized something at a very young age: Most people have trouble accepting the following: You can be robbed, neglected or betrayed. Once you internalize this, you learn to value everything that you have. What the hood taught me about money Money is not the root of all evil. Not having money is. But I am absolutely saying that they cause less of it. There are purely evil people in the world, but most crime — especially violent crime — is committed for financial reasons. A drug dealing dispute probably started it. That armed robbery at the convenience store for bucks that cost some dude his life? I once watched thugs beat and rob a pizza delivery boy on Christmas Eve! The few that did, sent two people: Things could always be worse My home situation was slightly better than average when compared to the typical ghetto home life. The thing about living in the projects is that everyone knows a lot about everyone. You know whose mom is a crackhead, prostitute or drug dealer. While everyone around you obviously has a fucked-up life, some people are way worse off. This knowledge makes you appreciate whatever little good shit that you do have. I have many fond memories of playing Sonic 3 on the Sega Genesis with my friends. For example, I used to have a friend that had all the newest video games. That type of thing can make a kid jealous, but we also had to eat at my house. My mom decided to spend money on food rather than games — a wise decision. Living in close proximity to other people with problems can drag you down. Life is like poker: This guy had a good hand, but got distracted by pussy. Now look at his stack! There are lots of people born in the ghetto every year. A few do a little better but only barely and still have their ties to the ghetto. Then there are those who make the ghetto a distant memory. I can proudly say that I am part of this last group. On top of the physical dangers you have to navigate, you also have to undo lots of damaging programming. Like attitudes about money. No one ever taught a broke project kid how to handle money. In 18 months I was broke as hell and overdrawing my bank account. Overcoming these challenges takes time but once you beat them, you are invincible. On my first romp in college I got into Georgetown and the University of Rochester. And to think, we both started out living on the same street in the same fucked-up public housing project. Want to change yours? Download the first chapter for free by clicking here. Join thousands of others who receive weekly exclusive content straight to their inbox.

4: 'Girl From The Hood' Lifetime TV Movie Needs Extras Before Filming Starts | WVXU

The following is an ode to black girls who grew up in the ghetto. Black girls who stay in the beauty supply and seek refuge in the nail salon. Black girls who lay their edges with the utmost precision.

5: Girls From Da Hood 4 by Ashley Antoinette

"Girls From Da Hood 4" is a fantastical fiction book. I personally enjoyed reading and listening to the vocabulary used by this author. I encourage young teenage females to read these types of books because it gives out knowledge for girls who are eager to learn about relationships and life in general.

6: Girls from Da Hood Series by Nikki Turner

Dating a girl from the hood - Find a man in my area! Free to join to find a man and meet a man online who is single and hunt for you. Rich man looking for older woman & younger woman.

7: Black Girls From The Hood Are The Real Trendsetters | Wanna's World

R. Marcos Taylor, who played music executive Suge Knight in "Straight Outta Compton," will reprise his role in "Girl From The Hood," and Curtis Hamilton will portray Dr. Dre, according to Deadline.

Empirically based microeconomics Capital financing At the Altar of the World The christ clone trilogy The Chinese and Japanese alphabet 373 Tracking a Diaspora Southern Living 2002 Annual Recipes (Southern Living Annual Recipes) Theres gotta be a better way Physical benefits of physical activity THE CAUSES OF PROTESTANTISM. Alaskas changing landscape I open my heart to others and celebrate our oneness Mari Gayatri Stein. Reel 983. Kings (EDs 940-955, 957-959, 961-964, 991-995, 1003-1006, 1009, 1012-1028, 1064, 1065, 1404, 14 Neurological skills Language, Truth, and Poetry Tangling conversation Aid, Trade, and Farm Policies: A Sourcebook on Issues and Interrelationships Dwnload novel kun fayakun. A Texas Cowboy (Classics of the Old West) Dirge in Cymbeline Human Aggression (Perspectives in Social Psychology) Supplemental hearings on the Third deficiency appropriations bill for 1949 Principles of corporate finance 10th edition test bank Asp.net architecture best practices e-book Materialized view in oracle example+ Sunshine on My Shoulders South Carolina County Maps Types of business growth Fantastic Universe, January 1959 Bloom! A Little Book About Finding Love Nclex 3500 Reckless road guns n roses Encyclopedia of the War of 1812 Freedom in the spirit A review of hypersonic boundary layer stability experiments in a quiet Mach 6 wind tunnel Post-Tiwanaku ethnogenesis in the coastal Moquegua Valley, Peru Richard C. Sutter My Vietnam Conflicts The Perfect Thing Managing conflict, power, and politics. In Defense of Aleister Crowley