"Goldilocks and the Three Bears" (originally titled "The Story of the Three Bears") is a 19th-century fairy tale of which three versions exist. The original version of the tale tells of a badly-behaved old woman who enters the forest home of three bachelor bears whilst they are away.

Plot[edit] One summer day, Bing Crosby , his wife Kathryn and their two youngest children Mary Frances and Nathaniel are camping out on a fishing trip. So Bing and the kids return to the lake, pull up a comfortable log upon which to sit and begin the chore. Their father reminds them however that since it has been such a long time since they heard it last, there might be a little more to the story than they remember. This leads into the first song, Take a Longer Look where Bing encourages the children to read between the lines. One of the verses mentions a butterfly going by, and suddenly Mary Frances can see the animated creature alighting right on the tip of her nose. Following it deep into the animated forest, she becomes Goldilocks and remains the only live-action figure. The Bears return from their jaunt to find the porridge, chairs and beds all disturbed. He runs back to a clearing where he gathers all manner of other forest animals and proceeds to convince them, by his decidedly skewered viewpoint, that Goldilocks does not belong in the forest. The easily swayed animals agree to assist Bobcat. Subsequently, the Bobcat leads an angry mob of forest animals over to the Bears house and demands that Papa Bear himself turn Goldilocks over to them. But this forest does NOT need protecting from a little girl who came to our house because she was lost and tired and hungry. The Bobcat is seen blowing a raspberry to his friend and tells him they will not be mollified so easily. Looking over her shoulder to make sure she is not being chased by the mob, she trips on an unseen log, and knocks herself cold. Baby Bear sees the accident and runs to get his father. Walking over to the site of the accident, followed timidly by the now somber crowd, and nobody knowing yet if Goldilocks is going to be alright or not, Papa Bear chastises the group for their reckless behavior, especially the Bobcat. Time passes and fortunately Goldilocks comes around, with only a bump on the head to show for her trouble. The animals cheer at her recovery and invite her and her family each in their own way to come and enjoy the forest anytime they want. And so, the Bears find the path upon which Goldilocks got herself lost in the first place, and they along with all the other animals, escort her safely out of the forest. Back to live action again on the same log on which they started their imaginary journey, the trio pick up their fish and supplies and head back to camp. Minutes later Bing notices his tackle box has been disturbed, and an instant later the kids see the door to the tent is open. And who was it? The kids all marvel at how cute and tiny he is, but their mother warns that bears can bite and will have a mother and father nearby. And so Bing, Kathryn, Mary Frances and Nathaniel send the little bear cub on his way “ back to his family. The reprise of Take a Longer Look is sung by the entire cast just before the credits roll. Outtakes[edit] In an unaired segment, as Goldilocks is being escorted out of the forest by all the other animals, the Bobcat is seen together with his wife the Lynx in a nod to mixed-marriages who indicates they are expecting cubs. After hearing of the aforementioned adventure from a deer on her way back home, the Lynx moves out of the den to have her cubs by herself, and leaves him to his own devices. However the Bobcat sees the error of his ways when he finds a litter of Fox kits near their mother, who has died of a forest-borne illness. He becomes a single parent to them and raises them as if they were his own. Time goes by and the Fox kits find the Bobcat-Lynx cubs in the forest, make friends and begin to play together. In an homage to The Brady Bunch then in the middle of their second season “ the Lynx moves back into the now-larger den with the cubs, the Bobcat brings the Fox kits, they become a blended family and everybody lives happily ever after. The footage and soundtrack have been lost to time; however, a script draft remains. Telecast and production[edit] First broadcast on NBC in March , [1] the production was scripted by AJ Carothers and the songs were written by Robert and Richard Sherman who also assisted with production unusual in those days. Veteran animation producers David H. The show was unique in that it included not only Bing himself, but his then-wife and two youngest children as well. In a interview with Friz Freleng and A. However, after this special aired around Eastertime and garnered a moderate to low viewership, the series was shelved, especially after a subsequent telecast later in the season attracted an even smaller audience. Of notable interest, the adult world of television had just recently been turned on its collective head when All in the Family had premiered on CBS back in January as a mid-season replacement. That show itself spawned an international co-production entitled Free to Be. All three specials remain mileposts in cultural development. Home video[edit] After a small handful of telecasts in syndication throughout the 1970s and 1980s, the show was released exactly once on VHS in 1992. Due to restrictions imposed by the estate of Bing Crosby, it has never been re-telecast or re-released on any home-video format since then. Intact copies fetch high dollar amounts at online retailers. The short catchy songs included therein are usually clocking in at under two minutes and featuring bright, upbeat messages of inclusion, acceptance, tolerance and other modern values became the basis for a great many progressive attempts to foster these values for children in the years to come. After she'd eaten the three bears' breakfasts she decided she was feeling a little tired. So, she walked into the living room where she saw three chairs. Goldilocks sat in the first chair to rest her feet.

Most stakeholders agree that critical thinking is a key competency that higher education should shape in students. How did we get here? Compulsory education also reinforced punctuality and obedience. Basically, it was designed to inculcate students not shape them into critical thinkers. For a long time, information was hard to get. In fact, most collegiate faculty remember a time when they physically had to go to a library to get information. Goldilocks meets the three bears of critical thinking. It turns out that the forest of critical thinking is full of bears. These conversations help inform text and classroom tool development to best help students and faculty overcome real pedagogical challenges. In fact, the top three barriers or bears, as I like to think of them to helping students become adept at critical thinking are the following: Many students are underprepared. Students lack a map through the critical thinking forest. Under preparedness. Our first bear-ier is under preparedness. Big deal you say? Not everyone is going to college; maybe just those who are college ready end up going to college. Well, according to the U. That leaves us with a significant portion of college freshmen who are not college ready. Under-prepared students face an uphill battle to learn new content, never mind working toward thinking critically about that content. This is where we can leverage technology and text materials to help our students fill their gaps and lay their foundation so they can build on that foundation in class. These invaluable tools quickly identify and remediate knowledge gaps. Arguably, the technology is there for more than just identifying and filling knowledge gaps. I use technology with my students so that they come to class prepared to participate. Let the technology do that so your class time is spent pursuing higher-order applications. The bear that lacks a map through the critical thinking forest. Hear directly from Dr. Her postdoctoral fellowship in microbiology and immunology focused on the role of viruses in cancer. Goldilocks and the Three Bears Fairy Tales - Full Story 4K Goldilocks and the Three Bears is one of the most popular fairy tales (story) for kids in English.

This story is featured in our Favorite Fairy Tales. Once upon a time there were three Bears, who lived together in a house of their own, in a wood. They had each a bowl for their porridge; a little bowl for the Little Wee Bear; and a middle-sized bowl for the Middle-sized Bear; and a great bowl for the Great Big Bear. And they had each a chair to sit in; a little chair for the Little Wee Bear; and a middle-sized chair for the Middle-sized Bear; and a great chair for the Great Big Bear. And they had each a bed to sleep in; a little bed for the Little Wee Bear; and a middle-sized bed for the Middle-sized Bear; and a great bed for the Great Big Bear. One day, after they had made the porridge for their breakfast, and poured it into their porridge-bowls, they walked out into the wood while the porridge was cooling, that they might not burn their mouths by beginning too soon, for they were polite, well-brought-up Bears. And while they were away a little girl called Goldilocks, who lived at the other side of the wood and had been sent on an errand by her mother, passed by the house, and looked in at the window. And then she peeped in at the keyhole, for she was not at all a well-brought-up little girl. Then seeing nobody in the house she lifted the latch. The door was not fastened, because the Bears were good Bears, who did nobody any harm, and never suspected that anybody would harm them. So Goldilocks opened the door and went in; and well pleased was she when she saw the porridge on the table. If she had been a well-brought-up little girl she would have waited till the Bears came home, and then, perhaps, they would have asked her to breakfast; for they were good Bears—a little rough or so, as the manner of Bears is, but for all that very good-natured and hospitable. But she was an impudent, rude little girl, and so she set about helping herself. First she tasted the porridge of the Great Big Bear, and that was too hot for her. Next she tasted the porridge of the Middle-sized Bear, but that was too cold for her. And then she went to the porridge of the Little Wee Bear, and tasted it, and that was neither too hot nor too cold, but just right, and she liked it so well that she ate it all up, every bit! Then Goldilocks, who was tired, for she had been catching butterflies instead of running on her errand, sate down in the chair of the Great Big Bear, but that was too hard for her. And then she sate down in the chair of the Middle-sized Bear, and that was too soft for her. But when she sat down in the chair of the Little Wee Bear, that was neither too hard nor too soft, but just right. So she seated herself in it, and there she sate till the bottom of the chair came out, and down she came, plump upon the ground; and that made her very cross, for she was a bad-tempered little girl. Now, being determined to rest, Goldilocks went upstairs into the bedchamber in which the Three Bears slept. And first she lay down upon the bed of the Great Big Bear, but that was too high at the head for her. And next she lay down upon the bed of the Middle-sized Bear, and that was too high at the foot for her. And then she lay down upon the bed of the Little Wee Bear, and that was neither too high at the head nor at the foot, but just right. So she covered herself up comfortably, and lay there till she fell fast asleep. By this time the Three Bears thought their porridge would be cool enough for them to eat it properly; so they came home to breakfast. Now careless Goldilocks had left the spoon of the Great Big Bear standing in his porridge. Then the Middle-sized Bear looked at his porridge and saw the spoon was standing in it too. Then the Little Wee Bear looked at his, and there was the spoon in the porridge-bowl, but the porridge was all gone! Now the careless Goldilocks had not put the hard cushion straight when she rose from the chair of the Great Big Bear. And the careless Goldilocks had squatted down the soft cushion of the Middle-sized Bear. Then the Three Bears thought they had better make further search in case it was a burglar, so they went upstairs into their bedchamber. Now Goldilocks had pulled the pillow of the Great Big Bear out of its place. And Goldilocks had pulled the bolster of the Middle-sized Bear out of its place. But when the Little Wee Bear came to look at his bed, there was the bolster in its place! And the pillow was in its place upon the bolster! And upon the pillow—? Now Goldilocks had heard in her sleep the great, rough, gruff voice of the Great Big Bear; but she was so fast asleep that it was no more to her than the roaring of wind, or the rumbling of thunder. And she had heard the middle-sized voice of the Middle-sized Bear, but it was only as if she had heard some one speaking in a dream. But when she heard the little wee voice of the Little Wee Bear, it was so sharp, and so shrill, that it awakened her at once. Up she started, and when she saw the Three Bears on one side of the bed, she tumbled herself out at the other, and ran to the window. Now the window was open, because the Bears, like good, tidy Bears, as they were, always opened their bedchamber window when they got up in the morning. So naughty, frightened little Goldilocks jumped; and whether she broke her neck in the fall, or ran into the wood and was lost there, or found her way out of the wood and got whipped for being a bad girl and playing truant, no one can say. But the Three Bears never saw anything more of her.

Once upon a time three bears lived in a nice little house in a great forest. There was the Father Bear, the Mother Bear, and the Baby Bear. They had each a bed to sleep in, a chair to sit on, and a bowl and spoon for eating milk or honey, which was their favourite food.

Southey describes them as very good-natured, trusting, harmless, tidy, and hospitable. Each of these "bachelor" bears has his own porridge bowl, chair, and bed. As she has been sent out by her family, she is a disgrace to them. She is impudent, bad, foul-mouthed, ugly, dirty, and a vagrant deserving of a stint in the House of Correction. She looks through a window, peeps through the keyhole, and lifts the latch. Assured that no one is home, she walks in. The dark end of the tale is reached when the bears return. Wee Bear finds his empty bowl, his broken chair, and the old woman in his bed and cries, "Somebody has been lying in my bed, and here she is! Origins[edit] Robert Southey The story was first recorded in narrative form by British writer and poet Robert Southey , and first published anonymously as "The Story of the Three Bears" in a volume of his writings called The Doctor. She eats their food and hides under a bed. Some sources state that it was illustrator John D. Batten who in reported a variant of the tale at least 40 years old. In this version, the three bears live in a castle in the woods and are visited by a fox called Scrapefoot who drinks their milk, sits in their chairs, and rests in their beds. Some maintain however that the story as well as the old woman originated with Southey. Uncle Tyler may have told a version with a vixen female fox as the intruder, and then Southey may have later confused "vixen" with another common meaning of "a crafty old woman". He explained his reasons for doing so in a dedicatory letter to his children, dated November , which was inserted at the beginning of the book: The "Story of the Three Bears" is a very old Nursery Tale, but it was never so well told as by the great poet Southey, whose version I have with permission given you, only I have made the intruder a little girl instead of an old woman. This I did because I found that the tale is better known with Silver-Hair, and because there are so many other stories of old women. The group was re-cast as Papa, Mama, and Baby Bear, but the date of this change is disputed. This arrangement represents the evolution of the ursine trio from the traditional three male bears to a family of father, mother, and child. Inexplicably, the illustrations depict the three as male bears. The cumulative effect of the several changes to the tale since its original publication was to transform a fearsome oral tale into a cozy family story with an unrealised hint of menace. He believes the tale is an escapist one that thwarts the child reading it from gaining emotional maturity. His own experience and his observation of others lead him to believe children align themselves with the tidy, organised ursine protagonists rather than the unruly, delinquent human antagonist. There are also three sequences of the bears discovering in turn that someone has been eating from their porridge, sitting in their chairs, and finally, lying in their beds, at which point is the climax of Goldilocks being discovered. This follows three earlier sequences of Goldilocks trying the bowls of porridge, chairs, and beds successively, each time finding the third "just right". Author Christopher Booker characterises this as the "dialectical three", where "the first is wrong in one way, the second in another or opposite way, and only the third, in the middle, is just right". The tables are turned when the defence limns the trauma suffered by the bears at the hands of that "brazen little crook", Goldilocks. She is an allusion to Goldilocks which is reflected in her name, translated from Chinese as "sun", referring to the colour yellow. They race to their garage to check on the status of the family Hummers. In , professional wrestler Bray Wyatt read a dark version to Edge and Christian. The tale is set after the events of the story where Goldilocks voiced by Natalie Lander and Jack Bear voiced by Georgie Kidder eventually became best friends.

They had each a pot for their porridge; a little pot for the Little, Small, Wee Bear; and a middle-sized pot for the Middle Bear, and a great pot for the Great, Huge Bear. And they had each a chair to sit in; a little chair for the Little, Small, Wee Bear; and a middle-sized chair for the Middle Bear, and a great chair for the Great, Huge Bear. And they had each a bed to sleep in; a little bed for the Little, Small, Wee Bear; and a middle-sized bed for the Middle Bear, and a great bed for the Great, Huge Bear. One day, after they had made the porridge for their breakfast, and poured it into their porridge-pots, they walked out into the wood while the porridge was cooling, that they might not burn their mouths by beginning too soon to eat it. While they were walking, a little Girl called Goldilocks came to the house. First she looked in at the window, and then she peeped in at the keyhole; and seeing nobody in the house, she turned the handle of the door. The door was not locked, because the Bears were good Bears, who did nobody any harm, and never suspected that anybody would harm them. So Goldilocks opened the door, and went in; and well pleased she was when she saw the porridge on the table. If she had been a thoughtful little Girl, she would have waited till the Bears came home, and then, perhaps, they would have asked her to breakfast; for they were good Bears—a little rough or so, as the manner of Bears is, but for all that very good-natured and welcoming. But the porridge looked tempting, and she set about helping herself. So first she tasted the porridge of the Great, Huge Bear, and that was too hot for her. And then she tasted the porridge of the Middle Bear, and that was too cold for her. And then she went to the porridge of the Little, Small, Wee Bear, and tasted that; and that was neither too hot nor too cold, but just right, and she liked it so well that she ate it all up. Then Goldilocks sat down in the chair of the Great, Huge Bear, and that was too hard for her. And then she sat down in the chair of the Middle Bear, and that was too soft for her. And then she sat down in the chair of the Little, Small, Wee Bear, and that was neither too hard nor too soft, but just right. So she seated herself in it, and there she sat till the bottom of the chair came out, and down she came crashing to the ground. Then Goldilocks went upstairs into the bedroom in which the three Bears slept. And first she lay down upon the bed of the Great, Huge Bear, but that was too high at the head for her. And next she lay down upon the bed of the Middle Bear, and that was too high at the foot for her. And then she lay down upon the bed of the Little, Small, Wee Bear; and that was neither too high at the head nor at the foot, but just right. So she covered herself up comfortably, and lay there till she fell fast asleep. By this time the Three Bears thought their porridge would be cool enough; so they came home to breakfast. Now Goldilocks had left the spoon of the Great, Huge Bear standing in his porridge. And when the Middle Bear looked at hers, she saw that the spoon was standing in it too. Then the Little, Small, Wee Bear looked at his, and there was the spoon in the porridge-pot, but the porridge was all gone. Now Goldilocks had not put the hard cushion straight when she rose from the chair of the Great, Huge Bear. And Goldilocks had squatted down the soft cushion of the Middle Bear. And you know what Goldilocks had done to the third chair. Then the Three Bears thought it necessary that they should make farther search; so they went upstairs into their bedroom. Now Goldilocks had pulled the pillow of the Great, Huge Bear out of its place. And Goldilocks had pulled the bolster of the Middle Bear out of its place. And when the Little, Small, Wee Bear came to look at his bed, there was the bolster in its place; and the pillow in its place upon the bolster; and upon the pillow was the head of Goldilocks—which was not in its place, for she had no business there. Goldilocks had heard in her sleep the great, rough, gruff voice of the Great, Huge Bear, and the middle voice of the Middle Bear, but it was only as if she had heard someone speaking in a dream. But when she heard the little, small, wee voice of the Little, Small, Wee Bear, it was so sharp, and so shrill, that it awakened her at once. Up she started; and when she saw the Three Bears on one side of the bed she tumbled herself out at the other, and ran to the window. Out Goldilocks jumped, and ran away as fast as she could run—never looking behind her; and what happened to her afterwards I cannot tell. But the Three Bears never saw anything more of her. This beginning sounds activity is available in the Goldilocks Literacy Packet located in the printables section below. Goldilocks Rhyming Activity Students roll the picture cube and give a word that rhymes with the picture. They mark their recording sheet when they give a correct rhyme. If students need help generating a rhyme they can ask a friend. This activity is available in the Goldilocks Literacy Packet located in the printables section below. It includes the recording sheet and a printable picture cube you can cut out and assemble or you can print out the cards and attach them to a square box or use a pocket die. Goldilocks Syllable Activity Students identify the pictures and the number of syllables in each word, then place them into the cottage with the correct number on the door. This activity is available in the Goldilocks Literacy Packet located in the printables section below and includes a recording sheet. Goldilocks Pocket Chart Activity The simple text in this pocket chart set will help your students learn concepts of print such as left to right directionality, return sweep, one-to-one correspondence and more. Goldilocks Story Sequencing Activity Students will learn to identify the beginning, middle, and end of a story. This activity helps students retell familiar stories which is a part of the Common Core Kindergarten Language Arts standards. Two sheets are included, a three part and a four part story sequencing sheet to meet the needs of your students. This activity can be found in the Goldilocks Literacy packet located in the printables section below. Goldilocks Emergent Reader The simple text in this book is designed to support your emergent readers. Use this book to reinforce concepts of print such as words are separated by spaces, left to right and top to bottom, written words match spoken words, common sight words, and more. The Goldilocks and the Three Bears emergent reader is available in the Goldilocks Literacy Packet located in the printables section below. Compare and Contrast Materials: Xerox copies of the front of several different Goldilocks stories, glue stick, chart paper, markers. Xerox the front cover of several Goldilocks books. Shrink the copies so they will all fit at the top of your chart paper. Glue the copies to the top of the chart and use the markers to make the lines for a graph. Show the students the actual books and have a discussion comparing and contrasting the stories. Have the students write their names under their favorite Goldilocks story and review the results in large group. Post the chart on the wall for future reference. Goldilocks Math Activities Porridge Races Available in the Goldilocks Math Packet located in the printables section below, the porridge races will help build number sense and one to one correspondence. Students will roll a die and move their playing piece towards the bowl of porridge. The playing cards are available in black and white and color for your convenience. Also included are two printable recording sheets in black and white, one for each version of the game. Goldilocks and the Three Bears Patterning These printable Goldilocks pattern activities can be found in the Goldilocks Math Packet available in the printables section below. Goldilocks Graphing Activity Students will enjoy rolling the cube and recording their rolls on the recording sheet. The Goldilocks Graphing activity is available in the Goldilocks math packet located in the printables section below. Printable Goldilocks Counting Book This easy to assemble book helps reinforce number sense and counting. Porridge Tasting Graph Materials: Make instant oatmeal and divide into disposable cups cheaper and smaller than disposable bowls. Use the wooden flat spoons that come with Dixie cups, they are much cheaper than plastic spoons. Add some brown sugar or honey to the oatmeal to give it some flavor. Prepare a graph in advance using the chart paper, draw a happy face on the top right hand side and a sad face on the top left. Discuss the results during large group and post on the wall. Small, Medium, Large Materials: Students can glue the three bears onto the regular paper according to size.

Contact Author The story of Goldilocks and three bears Goldilocks is very popular fairy tale character. Her visit to the cottage of three bears is also well known and documented to every single detail. This fairy tale inspired numerous poems, books, cartoons and movies and her golden hair became a symbol of joyful and happy childhood. For some time we were also pretty sure about the author of Goldilocks although she was not called Goldilocks then, back in 19 century. Shall we explore the fascinating history of Goldilocks and her constantly changing relation with the three bears? She accidentally found a cottage with half opened doors. There was also a sign telling there live Papa, Mamma and Tiny Bear. Because the doors were already opened she peeked inside and saw a kettle with hot soup and three bowls ready for bears. There was no sign of bears in the cottage. Place was so untidy Goldilocks decided to clean it up and when she finished the kitchen she got in bedroom and clean it up too. In the meantime bears returned from the walk. After first surprise they welcomed Goldilocks and offer her to join them for dinner. They spent the day playing. At the end of the day bears accompanied Goldilocks to her house where she lived with her grandma. Goldilocks taught them to clean and dust and do the housework. From then on they lived and played together as a best friends. Not the version you remember? It was published in and it has all typical elements of now widely recognized Goldilocks: To be fair we should admit at least one important deviation from many other variants: I blame author for that. We will return to that later to explain Goldilocks principle but first of all we will try to find the roots of Goldilocks and the Three Bears. Gold has strong symbolic meaning in fairy tales, but Goldilocks or Golden Hair was not gold from the beginning. Until around it was silver, and than were several versions of prominent writers already circulating. More changes were to be made before the end of the century. The girl changed from intruder to nice little helper similar to Snow White and bears, three males, not necessary related to each other, just living together, became a family of mummy, daddy and a child without explicit gender. English writer Joseph Cundall is credited as one of the most important authors in development of the now famous story about Goldilocks and three bears. It was an old lady So silver hair was logical. Cundall decided to change an old lady with a child because in his opinion there was already too many fairy tales and nursery rhymes with old ladies as antagonists villains. What about the Bears? Bears were not a family from the beginning In text they were first described as a family in , although there are illustrations from where they were already drawn as mother, father and son. And there is also a version of brother and sister being friends to the little bear. Little bear is important because he was originally the protagonist hero of the story. Because the bears were in earlier versions portrayed as victims of the intruder, little bear was the character with whom kids mostly sympathised. Portrait of Robert Southey, source: It was written by Robert Southey and it describes three bears as well behaved and civilized. In the meantime delinquent old woman broke in the house and started messing around with their property. The behaviour of old lady is contrary described with lots of negative comments, not common in tales and fables. Southey wrote how she first peek through the keyhole and than turned the handle. The door was closed and the case of burglary is evident! She tried the food of all three bears and ate all the food of the little one. She tried the seats of all three bears and broke the seat of the little one. She tried the bed of all three bears and finally fallen asleep in the bed of the little one. All bear were victims but the smallest was affected by far the most. He was the one to be sympathized by. At the end the old lady runs away and author suggests she should be sent to the correction institution! This version was considered as original work of Robert Southey until the middle of 20 century when one more older version was found. After the bears unsuccessfully tried to burn and drown her, they finally impaled her on church steeple. This suggest the lady was really a witch! Original Goldilocks was an old witch? And maybe she was a fox And there is also an old English tale named Scrapefoot with three bears living in a castle my home is my castle too and a fox named Scrapefoot who did exactly the same as an old lady in The Three Bears. Stories are related for sure, but nobody knows which came first. Was Goldilocks a fox or an old woman? There is a strong theory supporting the fox. In English tale about the three bears the fox is the intruder and because old woman is also sometimes called she-fox Robert Southey who apparently heard this story from his uncle changed fox into she-fox. There is also a word vixen, coming from old English for feminine of fox and is widely used to describe a malicious woman.

On the table were three bowls of porridge, one large bowl, one middle-sized bowl and one small bowl - and three spoons. Goldilocks was hungry and the porridge looked good, so she sat in the great big chair, picked up the large spoon and tried some of the porridge from the big bowl.

There was a great big father bear, a middle-sized mother bear and a tiny baby bear. One morning, their breakfast porridge was too hot to eat, so they decided to go for a walk in the forest. While they were out, a little girl called Goldilocks came through the trees and found their house. She knocked on the door and, as there was no answer, she pushed it open and went inside. In front of her was a table with three chairs, one large chair, one middle-sized chair and one small chair. On the table were three bowls of porridge, one large bowl, one middle-sized bowl and one small bowl and three spoons. Goldilocks was hungry and the porridge looked good, so she sat in the great big chair, picked up the large spoon and tried some of the porridge from the big bowl. But the chair was very big and very hard, the spoon was heavy and the porridge too hot. Goldilocks jumped off quickly and went over to the middle-sized chair. But this chair was far too soft, and when she tried the porridge from the middle-sized bowl it was too cold. So she went over to the little chair and picked up the smallest spoon and tried some of the porridge from the tiny bowl. This time it was neither too hot nor too cold. It was just right and so delicious that she ate it all up. But she was too heavy for the little chair and it broke in pieces under her weight. Next Goldilocks went upstairs, where she found three beds. There was a great big bed, a middle-sized bed and a tiny little bed. By now she was feeling rather tired. The big bed was very hard and far too big. Then she tried the middle-sized bed, but that was far too soft. It was neither too hard nor too soft. In fact, it felt just right, all cosy and warm. In a little while, the three bears came back from their walk in the forest. They saw at once that she had pushed open the door of their house and Father Bear looked around.
