Tablecloths were removed, the lavishness of table settings reconsidered, service reimaged, and great food democratized, as chefs, restaurateurs, and the dining public reassessed what was actually important in a restaurant. We had confused the fancy trappings of fine dining for quality cuisine, and this was the reckoning. Formal was out, casual was in. But today, where a great meal can be at your door with a couple taps on your iPhone, restaurants are realizing some of those old trappings are actually worth it. The creature comforts, theater, and grandeur are returning. These are the 10 best new restaurants in America. The restaurant impresses upon entry. The spacious dining room is filled with curved leather banquettes, soaring mirrors behind the bar, a whimsical mural on the far wall, and an open kitchen tucked in the corner. Papadopoulos can take the familiar and add layers of flavor to make it outstanding. The dinner rolls are riffs on classic Hawaiians, served with butter made in-house from cultured cream steeped with ham. I build triggers into the menu. I want to have a conversation with you about the langoustine that came from Scotland today or a beautiful prawn from Santa Barbara. Within the landmarked Philip Johnson-designed room, waiters in Tom Ford suits entertain with table-side preparations. Start without any sort of theater, and order the crab cake atop a rich remoulade and covered in thin slices of golden brown potato. Rossoblu Los Angeles is booming with outstanding dining right now—and with Italian cuisine in particular. At their best, Italian and Californian cuisines both start with fresh, local meats and produce and let them shine on the plate. Sotto, his ode to southern Italian cooking and Neapolitan pizza, established him as a leader in the genre. He and his wife, Dina, transformed a hulking concrete building into a welcoming space where the open kitchen and wood-burning hearth turn out hearty, rustic, comforting, and expertly executed food. Pair it all with a glass of the delightful sparkling red Lambrusco that Rossoblu unabashedly boasts on its wine list. Cote The inspiration for Cote , admits owner Simon Kim, is what he calls his carnivorous mind. With chef David Shim—formerly of M. The duo have created a convivial scene with impressive food to match. Back upstairs, every table is outfitted with a gas-fired grill, which has ceramic charcoals that retain heat to allow even thicker cuts to cook well. The meat is the most expensive item in the house, Shim says, so he offers classes for servers to grill the beef right every time. JuneBaby speaks to who I am as an individual soul and as an African-American male from a food standpoint. Begin by tearing off a piece of the stretchy turmeric flatbread and scooping up the smoky eggplant puree studded with briny Peruvian olives, crunchy cancha corn, and microgreens. Mom should be proud.
