View PDF Version Using Newspapers for Genealogical Research The newspapers of a community chronicle the successes, failures, and everyday lives of the people who live there. To the family historian, newspapers of the late 19th and early 20th centuries can be especially helpful because of their abundance of personal news and social items. Besides descriptions of occurrences within the community, they also include local angles to national, regional, and state events. The objectivity sought by modern newspapers was not necessarily a goal of their predecessors. Editors felt free to express their opinions on any given subject, and to describe local scandals in detail. This provides a gold mine of information for the family historian. Detailed obituaries and marriage notices that provide a great deal of family information and sometimes migration background. Social items, such as notices of visitors from out of town; visits of local people to other places; birthday parties and their attendees; illnesses; community events, contests, and holiday celebrations and their participants; notices of residents who have moved to other locations; etc. News stories in which ancestors played a role, such as automobile or buggy accidents; explosions, fires, tornadoes or other disasters; crimes; proceedings of meetings of local governing bodies; listings of candidates for upcoming elections; etc. These often include the name of the proprietor of a shop, and provide present day readers with a flavor of what business life was like at the time the ancestor lived. To locate these bibliographies or other books described in this guide, researchers should check the online catalog at www. When no newspaper bibliography exists for a state, one should check guides to resources for the particular state for information on newspaper collections. Checking the websites of state libraries is another good strategy for identifying newspaper lists and bibliographies. Some national as well as ethnic newspaper bibliographies and union lists also have been published. Examples of national and state newspaper bibliographies include: Ayer Directory of Publications. Ayer Press, published annually. Iowa State Historical Society. History and Bibliography of American Newspapers, American Antiquarian Society, Guide to Ohio Newspapers, Ohio Historical Society, Guide to Wyoming Newspapers, Wyoming State Library, United States Government Printing Office. Guide to North Carolina Newspapers on Microfilm. The Newspapers of Nevada: A History and Bibliography, University of Nevada Press, Louisiana State University, University of the State of New York, Library of Michigan, State Historical Society of Missouri, n. California State Library Foundation. Alaska Newspapers on Microfilm, University of Alaska, A Bibliography and Union List. Pennsylvania Library Association, Tennessee State Library and Archives, Salt Lake City, UT: Utah State Historical Society, Examples of sources listing ethnic newspapers are: The German Language Press of the Americas, 2 vols. University of Minnesota, However, the department owns microfilms of a dozen newspapers from the Colonial period for Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Maryland. Check the microtext catalog under the headings Miscellaneous and Newspapers for these titles. Once identified, other newspapers can be found at: State libraries, archives, and historical societies, which often have the responsibility of tracking and collecting newspapers published in a particular state. Microfilmed copies of newspapers are sometimes available from these institutions through interlibrary loan to local libraries. County seat libraries, which may have original or microfilmed copies of newspapers published within the county boundaries, and often from neighboring counties. Newspaper offices, which generally have microfilmed copies of their newspapers on file, but may or may not allow the public to use them. Researchers should remember that newspaper offices are businesses and not public institutions. They are not obligated to provide access to their libraries. Full text articles or article indices for some newspapers are available via computer network at libraries, although this usually applies to fairly recent papers published in large cities. Examples of these types of sources include: Clegg, Michael Barren, et al. Ohio Newspaper Abstracts Series, Vols. Maryland Eastern Shore Newspaper Abstracts. Western Maryland Newspaper Abstracts: The Historical Genealogical Department has the largest collection of these publications in North America. Some have everyname indices that are published at the end of each issue, year, or volume. Check under the name of the state and county to find citations for articles of newspaper excerpts that have been published. Use of Newspapers Following are some tips on using newspapers for genealogical research: Generally, the smaller the area covered by the newspaper, the more effective it will be for genealogical research. Use a village or town newspaper if it exists for the time period needed. If no town newspaper exists, use the newspaper published in the county seat, but look for a column devoted to the town or township where the ancestor lived. If more than one newspaper survives for the time period, look at each. They may have very different coverage because of political affiliations or other reasons. Do not be afraid to jump political boundaries if the area where the ancestor lived was closer to a town in the neighboring county or state. When beginning to look at a newspaper, get to know its design for a more efficient use of time when searching. Local news often appeared on the same page in each issue. Note the local "brevities" or social news briefs. In these are recorded births, marriages, deaths, sickness, new jobs, moves, visits, and more. Watch for abbreviations used in dating events announced in newspapers. For more information on the general methodology of using newspapers for genealogical research, check the section on newspapers in a general genealogy how-to book, such as: These help individuals researching the same lines get in contact with one another. To locate columns, consult: Newspaper Genealogical Column Directory, 6th ed. Genealogical Column of the Boston Transcript, Indexed. The following suggestions are most effective when applied to a newspaper covering a small town. In metropolitan areas, a neighborhood or ethnic newspaper may be more helpful than a large daily newspaper. Some suggestions for using current newspapers include: Write a letter to the editor of the newspaper in the area where the family lived, briefly explaining the research being done and asking anyone who knows more information to contact you. If the newspaper in the area where the family lived does not publish letters to the editor of this type, buy a classified or display advertisement asking for information. Read the genealogy column in the newspaper where the family lived, if one is published. Submit a query to the column or, if no column exists, submit a query to the column in the newspaper published in the state capital. Locate obituaries of recently-deceased descendants of your ancestor. These usually include survivors who can be contacted for more information.
