He did not want Isaac to marry a Canaanite daughter. Nahor had either accompanied Terah and Abraham in going there or else made the journey from Ur himself later. The servant went with the young lady into the city, met her family Gen. He died at the advanced age of Gen. Isaac was the least conspicuous of the patriarchs. He was not given to daring action or unusual exploits. Jacob and Esau born Genesis She inquired as to the significance and God told her that this was a sign that the two, followed in turn by their lineage, would struggle with each other in years to come, with the elder being made to serve the younger. Having been born first, Esau enjoyed the inheritance rights of the eldest son. In one case a brother sells a grove, which was his inheritance, to another brother for three sheep. Relations With Philistines Genesis They moved near the city of Gerar where Philistines lived, an area where Abraham had similarly sojourned Gen. The stolen blessing Genesis Isaac would live to be years old Gen. His age here is figured on the basis that Jacob was now 77 and he was born when Isaac was She persuaded Jacob to disguise himself as his brother in order to procure it. But what had been done, even though in this manner, was binding, and all Isaac could do for Esau was grant a secondary blessing, promising all that was left, the and lands out of reach of the winter rains and subservience to his younger brother. In later life, however, God changed him, and he became truly devoted. The flight to Haran Genesis Though Jacob had wronged his father, Isaac loved him and had his best interest in mind. A comparison of Scriptures reveals that he was 77 years of age. Jacob met Rachel, his bride-to-be, as she came to water her flock of sheep at a well near Haran. Here Jacob was to spend the next 20 years. Twenty years in Haran Genesis Jacob loved Rachel and agreed with Laban to serve him seven years for her hand in marriage. He waited only one week, while wedding festivities for Leah were completed Gen. He was then permitted to marry Rachel, but he was expected to work seven additional years in payment for her, which he did. It was at this point that the promise to Abraham of more than a century and a half earlier began to be fulfilled in greater degree. Jacob was now given a large family Gen. Leah bore in succession Reuben son, Simeon hearing , Levi joining , and Judah praise. Jacob did so, and Bilhah gave birth to Dan judge and Naphtali wrestling. She also gave birth to a daughter, Dinah judgment. This gave Jacob eleven sons and one daughter. The twelfth son, Benjamin son of my right hand , was born to Rachel, but not until the family had moved back to Canaan Gen. The last six years Gen. Laban agreed, since he knew that normally few animals were born spotted. Jacob had come to Haran as one person alone and now, after twenty years, was departing as wealthy man with a large family Gen. Return to Canaan Genesis The matter ended with an agreement that neither he nor Jacob would impose on the other again. Jacob feared an inevitable meeting with Esau; but before that meeting could occur, he experienced another confrontation of much greater significance. This came in the form of a wrestling match with the Angel of God. Jacob was now 97 years old but evidently still in good physical condition. He realized as the match progressed that his opponent was more than human, and accordingly he asked for a blessing. From this time on, Jacob is not seen scheming or deceiving. On the next day, Jacob received clear evidence that God indeed was blessing him. He met Esau, and no bitterness was shown Gen. The brothers embraced each other warmly, exchanged pleasantries, and parted-with all previous barriers removed. Here Jesus met the woman of Samaria years later John 4. Hamor and Shechem agreed, and all Shechemites were circumcised. Dinah was brought home. Jacob, fearing reprisal from other inhabitants of the area, quickly moved further south. Once more God appeared to him, this time renewing the promises given to both Abraham and Isaac concerning a large posterity and the land of Canaan as an inheritance Gen. When he drew near Bethlehem, Rachel died while giving birth to Benjamin Gen. When Isaac died, Esau came to join Jacob for his burial Gen. In later years Edom proved to be a perennial enemy of Israel.

Hāgar the Horrible is the title and main character of an American comic strip created by cartoonist Dik Browne, and syndicated by King Features www.enganchecubano.com first appeared in February , and was an immediate success.

When Hagar saw that she had conceived, "her mistress was despised in her eyes," v. Hagar fled, turning her steps toward her native land through the great wilderness traversed by the Egyptian road. By the fountain in the way to Shur the angel of the Lord found her, charged her to return and submit herself under the hands of her mistress, and delivered the remarkable prophecy respecting her unborn child recorded in vs. On her return she gave birth to Ishmael, and Abraham was then eighty-six years old. When Ishmael was about sixteen years old, he was caught by Sarah making sport of her young son Isaac at the festival of his weaning, and Sarah demanded the expulsion of Hagar and her son. She again fled toward Egypt, and when in despair at the want of water, an angel again appeared to her, pointed out a fountain close by, and renewed the former promises to her. The history of Hagar is given in Genesis In an allegory, Paul makes Hagar represent the Jewish church, which was in bondage to the ceremonial law; as Sarah represents the true church of Christ, which is free from this bondage, Galatians 4: Her name is much honored among the Arabs claiming to be her descendants. When she was about to become a mother she fled from the cruelty of her mistress, intending apparently to return to her relatives in Egypt, through the desert of Shur, which lay between. Wearied and worn she had reached the place she distinguished by the name of Beer-lahai-roi "the well of the visible God" , where the angel of the Lord appeared to her. In obedience to the heavenly visitor she returned to the tent of Abraham, where her son Ishmael was born, and where she remained 16 till after the birth of Isaac, the space of fourteen years. Sarah after this began to vent her dissatisfaction both on Hagar and her child. This was accordingly done, although with reluctance on the part of Abraham Genesis They wandered out into the wilderness, where Ishmael, exhausted with his journey and faint from thirst, seemed about to die. Hagar "lifted up her voice and wept," and the angel of the Lord, as before, appeared unto her, and she was comforted and delivered out of her distresses Genesis Ishmael afterwards established himself in the wilderness of Paran, where he married an Egyptian Genesis An Egyptian woman, the handmaid or slave of Sarai; a present, perhaps, from Pharaoh when Abram dissembled to him in Egypt Genesis Mention is made of her in two passages Genesis 16 ; Genesis The Scornful Handmaid and Her Flight: In the first narrative Genesis 16 it is related that Sarai, despairing at her age of having children, gave Hagar to Abram as a concubine. As Hagar was not an ordinary household slave but the peculiar property of her mistress compare Genesis In the prospect of becoming a mother, Hagar, forgetting her position, seems to have assumed an insolent bearing toward her childless mistress. Sarai felt keenly the contempt shown her by her handmaid, and in angry tones brought her conduct before Abram. Now that her plan was not working out smoothly, she unfairly blamed her husband for what originated with herself, and appealed to Heaven to redress her grievance. Her Vision and Return: But the angel of Yahweh who is here introduced for the first time as the medium of theophany appeared to her as she was resting by a spring and commanded her to return and submit herself to her mistress, promising her an innumerable seed through her unborn son, concerning whom he uttered a striking prediction see ISHMAEL. To the angel who is now said to be Yahweh Himself Hagar gave the name "Thou art a God of seeing" the Revised Version British and American "that seeth" , for she said, "Have I even here in the desert where God, whose manifestations were supposed to be confined to particular places, might not be expected to reveal Himself looked after him that seeth me? Obedient to the heavenly vision Hagar returned, as the narrative implies, to her mistress and gave birth to Ishmael, Abram being then eighty-six years old. The idea in The word translated "here" generally means "hither," and there is no explanation of the "living one" in the name of the well. It has therefore been proposed to emend the Hebrew text and read "Have I even seen God, and lived after my seeing? But there are difficulties in the way of accepting this emendation. The name of God, "a God of seeing," would require to be interpreted in an objective sense as "a God who is seen," and the consequent name of the well, "He that seeth me liveth," would make God, not Hagar, as in Her Harsh Expulsion and Divine Help: The other narrative Genesis The presence and conduct of Ishmael during the family feast held on the occasion roused the anger and jealousy of Sarah who, fearing that Ishmael would share the inheritance with Isaac, peremptorily demanded the expulsion of the slave-mother and her son. So next morning the bondswoman and her son were sent forth with the bare provision of bread and a skin of water into the wilderness of Beersheba. When the water was spent, Hagar, unable to bear the sight of her boy dying from thirst, laid him under a shrub and withdrew the distance of a bowshot to weep out her sorrow. But the angel of God, calling to her out of heaven, comforted her with the assurance that God had heard the voice of the lad and that there was a great future before him. Then her eyes were opened to discover a well of water from which she filled the skin and gave her son to drink. He made his home in the wilderness of Paran, and his mother took a wife for him out of her own country.

Practical Lessons from the History: The life and experience of Hagar teach, among other truths, the temptations incident to a new position; the foolishness of hasty action in times of trial and difficulty; the care exercised over the lonely by the all-seeing God; the Divine purpose in the life of everyone, however obscure and friendless; how God works out His gracious purposes by seemingly harsh methods; and the strength, comfort and encouragement that ever accompany the hardest experiences of His children.

Critical Points in the Documents: Genesis 16 belongs to the Jahwist, J, except from the nature of the variations in the narratives many critics hold that we have here two different accounts of the same incident. It is said, however, that Elohist E represents Ishmael as a child "playing" The Revised Version, margin, Septuagint paizonta with Isaac at the weaning festival, and young enough to be carried by his mother and "cast" under a shrub; while according to the Priestly Code, the Priestly Code P, Genesis The argument for the double narrative here does not seem conclusive. The word metsacheq Then as to Allegorical Use of the Story by Paul: In elaborating his reference, the apostle institutes a series of contrasts. Hagar, the bondswoman, represents the old covenant which was given from Mt. Thus Hagar corresponds to "the Jerusalem that now is," that is, the Jewish state which is in spiritual bondage with her children; while Sarah represents "the Jerusalem that is above," "our mother" Revised Version British and American, the mother of us Christians, that free spiritual city to which Christians even now belong Philippians 3: By this allegory the apostle would warn the Galatian Christians of the danger which beset them from their Judaizing brethren, of their subjection to the covenant of works and their ultimate expulsion from the household of faith. The incident taken by itself, indeed, does not contain any suggestion of such a hidden meaning. For a discussion of the text and interpretation of Galatians 4:

Hagar in Genesis. This is a summary of the account of Hagar from Genesis 16 and Hagar and Abraham. Hagar was the Egyptian slave of Sarah, Abraham's wife. Sarah had been barren for a long time and sought a way to fulfill God's promise to Abraham that Abraham would be father of many nations, especially since they were getting older, so she offered Hagar to Abraham as a second wife.

This is a summary of the account of Hagar from Genesis 16 and Sarah complained to Abraham, and treated Hagar harshly, and Hagar ran away. At a spring en route, an angel appeared to Hagar, who instructed her to return to Sarah, so that she may bear a child who "shall be a wild ass of a man: Then she was told to call her son Ishmael. Afterward, Hagar referred to God as " El Roi ". At a celebration after Isaac was weaned, Sarah found the teenage Ishmael mocking her son. She was so upset by it that she demanded that Abraham send Hagar and her son away. Abraham gave Hagar bread and water then sent them into the wilderness of Beersheba. She and her son wandered aimlessly until their water was completely consumed. In a moment of despair, she burst into tears. God heard her and her son crying and came to rescue them. He also told Hagar that God "will make a great nation" of Ishmael. New citizens are begotten to the earthly city by nature vitiated by sin but to the heavenly city by grace freeing nature from sin. The latter compared the children of Sarah to the redeemed, and those of Hagar to the unredeemed, who are "carnal by nature and mere exiles". She is a revered woman in the Islamic faith. After her seventh run, an angel appeared over the location of the Zamzam and then hit the ground with his heel or his wing and caused a miraculous well to spring out of the ground. This is called the Zamzam Well and is located a few metres from the Kaaba in Mecca. Sarah treated Hagar well, and induced women who came to visit her to visit Hagar also. However Hagar, when pregnant by Abraham, began to act superciliously toward Sarah, provoking the latter to treat her harshly, to impose heavy work upon her, and even to strike her. Rashi argues that "Keturah" was a name given to Hagar because her deeds were as beautiful as incense hence: They were listed as two different people in the genealogies in 1 Chronicles 1: It also reverses the conventional Christian interpretation by portraying the Christian character as the outcast. Edmonia Lewis, the early African-American and Native American sculptor, made Hagar the subject of one of her most well-known works. She said it was inspired by "strong sympathy for all women who have struggled and suffered". A similarly sympathetic view prevails in more recent literature. The novel The Stone Angel by Margaret Laurence has a protagonist named Hagar married to a man named Bram, whose life story loosely imitates that of the biblical Hagar. Israel[ edit ] Since the s, the custom has arisen of giving the name "Hagar" to newborn female babies. The giving of this name is often taken as a controversial political act, marking the parents as being supporters of reconciliation with the Palestinians and Arab World, and is frowned upon by many, including nationalists and the religious. The connotations of the name were represented by the founding of the Israeli journal Hagar: Studies in Culture, Polity and Identities in Wilma Bailey, in an article entitled "Hagar: A Model for an Anabaptist Feminist", refers to her as a "maidservant" and "slave". She sees Hagar as a model of "power, skills, strength and drive". Weems argues that the relationship between Sarah and Hagar exhibits "ethnic prejudice exacerbated by economic and social exploitation". Critics of this and other assisted reproductive technologies have used Hagar in their analysis.
