I first came across Hannah Jane Peterson as the first runner-up of the Adela and Larry Elow American Songbook Scholarship Competition. The year-old performer is a senior at New York's Professional Performing Arts School and already has an agent.

Development[edit] The best idea is that I miss home. So if we could maybe film in Nashville and everyone could see our house and where we live, that we have a farm, that would be really exciting. She said that, at the time, the best concept she has thought of involves going back to her hometown of Nashville, Tennessee. She spends up to eight and a half hours a day working on the set, but her hours could get longer once she becomes a legal adult. She went to say there would be many guest stars, and herself riding horses and attending school. He finds Jackson selling "Hannah wigs" and everyone around him looks like Hannah from the back so he turns them all around looking for the real one. A huge wind blew a projection screen into a Ferris wheel full of passengers, who were extras for the movie. There was no serious injury. Miley Cyrus and her father Billy Ray were not on the set when the accident happened. The Movie, a minor accident occurred involving a piece of production equipment. Fortunately, there were only a few minor injuries. Medical personnel have treated the extras and crew involved. None of the cast was on the set. Due to a scheduling conflict with G. The Rise of Cobra, which he was also signed to score, he had to drop out. A karaoke version was released on August 18, The Movie soundtrack previewed by Miley Cyrus. She also performed her song on American Idol on April 16, The Movie was held on April 2, in Los Angeles. The real lesson, as always, is that since even Miley has to work overtime to be Hannah, every girl in the audience "if she tries hard enough" can become the star she longs to be. The characters are wholesome, the plot is easy to follow and the songs all sound the same, so you can really only get one stuck in your head at a time. But even as adults give their blessing for prepubescent moviegoers to see the film, they should be plotting to stay as far away from the theater as possible. Over and over again. The little 6- to year-old girls that filled the rest of the theater were singing along and dancing in their seats. The predictable ending strays from the fun tone to address drama from the two main character arcs. He had also said that "she dresses trashy, insults the intelligence of teens, and writes the most formulaic and manipulative songs ever". A heroine is typically, especially in classic literature, a damsel in distress who needs to be rescued. The boys rode the horses, the boys sailed the boats, and the boys fought the pirates - all activities in which I wanted to be engaged.

Barbara Deaderick Bring on the next generation! One can see why. Her debut show which naturally includes personal references, is cleverly framed by a survey in Seventeen Magazine. Fine enunciation seems effortless. On your first date, he must do what? None are contemporary or cutesy. Peterson would undoubtedly be under contract at MGM were this an earlier era. Drive a fancy car; B. Cook gourmet meals; C. Always carry in the groceries; or D. That reminds me of my grandpa and the scent of Old Spice. The song is tender, understated, pristine. Two numbers popularized by Merman and Garland showcase her fondness for classic material. When Weber segues into boogie woogie, she barely moves but for a stage cross wiggle reflecting infectious pleasure. When she performed this in the competition, Peterson hopped up onto the piano, something impossible in the pretty gown she wears tonight. I also miss the scat she used in that presentation. At one point, Peterson literally jumps up and down. Exuberance is palpableâ€”suggesting the energy of a race horse at the gate. There are two junctures when a kewpie doll voice briefly, disconcertingly appears and one that oddly affects a New York accentâ€”all inappropriate. Light as a spring breeze and equally dreamy, the performance illuminates a sweet girl with a powerful dream: This is an auspicious first outing of a charming young woman with grit and plans.

When the novel begins, she is an isolated, powerless ten-year-old living with an aunt and cousins who dislike her. As the novel progresses, she grows in strength. She distinguishes herself at Lowood School because of her hard work and strong intellectual abilities. As a governess at Thornfield, she learns of the pleasures and pains of love through her relationship with Edward Rochester. After being deceived by him, she goes to Marsh End, where she regains her spiritual focus and discovers her own strength when she rejects St. A traditional romantic hero, Rochester has lived a troubled wife. Married to an insane Creole woman, Bertha Mason, Rochester sought solace for several years in the arms of mistresses. The wedding falls through when she learns of the existence of his wife. As penance for his transgressions, he is punished by the loss of an eye and a hand when Bertha sets fire to Thornfield. She dies unloved by her children and unrepentant of her mistreatment of Jane. Addicted to drinking and gambling, John supposedly commits suicide at the age of twenty-three when his mother is no longer willing or able to pay his debts. Usefulness is her mantra. She enters a convent in Lisle, France, eventually becoming the Mother Superior and leaving her money to the church. She accuses her sister, Eliza, of sabotaging her plans to marry Lord Edwin Vere. Eventually, Georgiana marries a wealthy, but worn-out society man. Bessie Lee The maid at Gateshead who sometimes consoles Jane by telling her entertaining stories and singing her songs. Bessie marries the coachman, Robert Leaven, and has three children. Lloyd The kind apothecary who suggests that Jane be sent to school following her horrifying experience in the red-room. His letter to Miss Temple clears Jane of the accusations Mrs. Reed has made against her. Brocklehurst The stingy, mean-hearted manager of Lowood. He hypocritically feeds the girls at the school starvation-level rations, while his wife and daughters live luxuriously. The minister of Brocklebridge Church, he represents a negative brand of Christianity, one that lacks all compassion or kindness. Although she is unfairly punished by Miss Scatcherd at Lowood, Helen maintains her poise, partially through her loving friendship with Miss Temple. Maria Temple The warm-hearted superintendent at Lowood who generously offers the girls bread and cheese when their breakfasts are inedible. An impressive scholar, a model of ladylike behavior and a compassionate person, Miss Temple is a positive role model for Jane. She cares for Jane and Helen, offering them seedcake in her room and providing Helen with a warm, private bed when she is dying. Miss Miller Teacher for the youngest students at Lowood who greets Jane on her first night at the school. Miss Scatcherd The history and grammar teacher at Lowood. She constantly humiliates and punishes Helen Burns. Miss Smith A red-cheeked teacher at Lowood who is in charge of sewing instruction. Blanche Ingram The beautiful and haughty society woman Rochester pretends to love. Her comments about the insipidness of governesses show the lack of respect that most governesses faced in the wealthy Victorian families where they worked. Rochester discovers her true feelings when he overhears a conversation between her and one of her other lovers. He immediately breaks off relations with her. Her hypocrisy, sensuality, and materialism make her another negative mode of femininity. A Creole woman from Spanish Town, Jamaica, Bertha was betrothed to Rochester by the arrangement of their fathers, who planned to consolidate their wealth. This beautiful and majestic woman disintegrates into debauchery, coarseness, and, eventually, madness soon after their wedding. Following the deaths of his brother and father, Rochester returns to England with Bertha, locking her up in the third story of Thornfield, with Grace Poole as her keeper. She occasionally escapes her imprisonment, perpetrating violence whenever she gets loose. Eventually, she sets fire to Thornfield. Bertha is another example of unsavory foreignness in the novel. During his visit to Thornfield, he is bitten and stabbed by Bertha when he goes up to her room alone. Her alcohol-induced lapses allow Bertha to escape from the third floor and perpetrate various crimes in the house, including the eventual fire that destroys Thornfield and maims Rochester. Jane chastises Hannah for her class prejudices, but she and Jane later become friends. John is a cold, despotic, excessively zealous. Unhappy with his humble position as the minister at Morton, St. John wants to become a missionary in order to meet his ambitions for power and glory. John tries to force Jane to marry him and move to India. Jane resists him, and he spends the rest of his life furthering British colonialism by forcing Christian values on the natives. Diana and Mary Rivers St. Working as governesses, they show the ways intelligent, well-bred women are degraded by their positions in wealthy families. Although she seems to love St. John, she has become engaged to the wealthy Mr. John leaves for India. John is physically attracted to her, he realizes that Rosamond would never be a good wife for him, because of her light-hearted, almost shallow, personality. While the Rivers are an ancient and esteemed family, the Olivers have "new money. Although he plans to adopt Jane, he dies before they ever meet, but leaves his entire fortune " 20, pounds " to her. He quarreled with Mr. The elderly servants who care for Rochester at Ferndean after Thornfield is destroyed by the fire.

Call and The Kyla: Return have been published and available for some time. Now, after what I believe may be sufficient pondering, I offer the following. I credit my mother with making me who I am. Not only did she teach me to think, to respect, and to create, she also taught me to read. In the woods, on a farm, there is a lot to keep the mind, body, and imagination active. I explored, and I pretended. On rainy days, I curled up in the corner with a book. What did I read? Classics – tons of them. She bought books for me from the Library when they would have their used book sales. My parents also owned a collection of books called Child Craft. One of these volumes contained myths, and I devoured it. For some reason, the older the story was, the more I loved it. Mountain symbol I scribbled my first short story at eight. So I wrote a new story, set out West, and of course, featuring an orphaned girl. So this was what was missing from my beloved classic literature – a female hero. I call her this because heroine does not mean female hero. A heroine is typically, especially in classic literature, a damsel in distress who needs to be rescued. The boys rode the horses, the boys sailed the boats, and the boys fought the pirates – all activities in which I wanted to be engaged. I wanted to do the saving. In short, I had little in common with the heroine, her pretty dresses, and elegant parties. Had a dragon tried to steal me, I would have either kicked him in the nose or talked him into taking me for a ride instead. And so, years passed, I matured, learned, and lived. As a freshman in college, I had a dream that was so vivid I still see it today. And contained in that dream was a rough plot outline of The Kyla, complete with the Mycarian race. And when I woke, the process started. Do the math, and you will realize that the novel was forever in growing and developing and I discovered the seed from which it sprung many, many years ago. Battle symbol As I progressed through undergrad and grad school, world mythology continued to fascinate me, and I took as many courses featuring it as my programs would allow. My area of North Carolina experienced its worst drought in my lifetime. My favorite theatre professor who also taught me screenwriting introduced me to the work and theories of Joseph Campbell. I might be at the bottom. Then, finally, a couple years ago, all of it came together – the female hero, the myth, and the world in which I grew up.

Chapter I The novel opens on a dreary November afternoon at Gateshead, the home of the wealthy Reed family. Reed, has forbidden her niece to play with her cousins Eliza, Georgiana, and the bullying John. John then hurls a book at the young girl, pushing her to the end of her patience. Jane finally erupts, and the two cousins fight. Once locked in the room, Jane catches a glimpse of her ghastly figure in the mirror, and, shocked by her meager presence, she begins to reflect on the events that have led her to such a state. Jane cries out in terror, but her aunt believes that she is just trying to escape her punishment, and she ignores her pleas. Jane faints in exhaustion and fear. Jane remains in bed the following day, and Bessie sings her a song. Jane is cautiously excited at the possibility of leaving Gateshead. Soon after her own reflections on the past in the red-room, Jane learns more of her history when she overhears a conversation between Bessie and Miss Abbott.

Chapter IV About two months have passed, and Jane has been enduring even crueller treatment from her aunt and cousins while anxiously waiting for the arrangements to be made for her schooling. Brocklehurst, the stern-faced man who runs the school. Brocklehurst abrasively questions Jane about religion, and he reacts with indignation when she declares that she finds the psalms uninteresting. Brocklehurst that the girl also has a propensity for lying, a piece of information that Mr. Reed, for once, seems to concede defeat. Shortly thereafter, Bessie tells Jane that she prefers her to the Reed children. Before Jane leaves for school, Bessie tells her stories and sings her lovely songs.

Chapter V Four days after meeting Mr. Brocklehurst, Jane boards the 6 a. When she arrives at the school, the day is dark and rainy, and she is led through a grim building that will be her new home. The following day, Jane is introduced to her classmates and learns the daily routine, which keeps the girls occupied from before dawn until dinner. Jane and Helen befriend one another, and Jane learns from Helen that Lowood is a charity school maintained for female orphans, which means that the Reeds have paid nothing to put her there. She also learns that Mr. Brocklehurst oversees every aspect of its operation: Jane quickly learns that life at the school is harsh. The girls are underfed, overworked, and forced to sit still during seemingly endless sermons. Still, she takes comfort in her new friendship with Helen, who impresses Jane with her expansive knowledge and her ability to patiently endure even the cruelest treatment from Miss Scatcherd. Helen tells Jane that she practices a doctrine of Christian endurance, which means loving her enemies and accepting her privation. Helen is self-critical only because she sometimes fails to live up to her ascetic standards: Brocklehurst spends his time away from the school. When he returns, Jane becomes quite nervous because she remembers his promise to her aunt, Mrs. When Jane inadvertently drops her slate in Mr. He orders Jane to stand on a stool while he tells the school that she is a liar, and he forbids the other students to speak to her for the rest of the day. Deeply ashamed, she is certain that her reputation at Lowood has been ruined, but Helen assures her that most of the girls felt more pity for Jane than revulsion at her alleged deceitfulness. Jane tells Miss Temple that she is not a liar, and relates the story of her tormented childhood at Gateshead. Miss Temple seems to believe Jane and writes to Mr. Miss Temple offers Jane and Helen tea and seed cake, endearing herself even further to Jane. Relieved and contented, Jane devotes herself to her studies. She excels at drawing and makes progress in French.

Chapter IX In the spring, life at Lowood briefly seems happier, but the damp forest dell in which the school resides is a breeding-ground for typhus, and in the warm temperatures more than half the girls fall ill with the disease. Jane remains healthy and spends her time playing outdoors with a new friend, Mary Ann Wilson. Helen is sick, but not with typhus—Jane learns the horrific news that her friend is dying of consumption. Jane takes Helen into her arms, and the girls fall asleep. During the night, Helen dies. Conditions improve dramatically for the young girls, and Jane excels in her studies for the next six years. After spending two more years at Lowood as a teacher, Jane decides she is ready for a change, partly because Miss Temple gets married and leaves the school. She advertises in search of a post as a governess and accepts a position at a manor called Thornfield. Before leaving, Jane receives a visit from Bessie, who tells her what has happened at Gateshead since Jane departed for Lowood. Georgiana attempted to run away in secret with a man named Lord Edwin Vere, but Eliza foiled the plan by revealing it to Mrs. John who has fallen into a life of debauchery and dissolution. He did not have the time to travel to Lowood and went away to Madeira a Portuguese island west of Morocco in search of wealth. Jane and Bessie part ways, Bessie returning to Gateshead, and Jane leaving for her new life at Thornfield. When she finally arrives at Thornfield it is nighttime. Fairfax, a prim, elderly woman, is waiting for Jane. It turns out that Mrs. Fairfax is not, as Jane had assumed from their correspondence, the owner of Thornfield, but rather the housekeeper. Fairfax also tells Jane about Rochester, saying that he is an eccentric man whose family has a history of extreme and violent behavior. Suddenly, Jane hears a peal of strange, eerie laughter echoing through the house, and Mrs. Fairfax explains that she is a rather unbalanced and unpredictable seamstress who works in the house. One evening a few months after her arrival at Thornfield, Jane is alone watching the moon rise when she perceives a horse approaching. Once she realizes that the horse has a rider, the uncanny moment ceases. Just after the horse passes her, it slips on a patch of ice, and its rider tumbles to the ground. Jane helps the man rise to his feet and introduces herself to him. She observes that he has a dark face, stern features, and a heavy brow. He is not quite middle-aged. Upon reentering Thornfield, Jane goes to Mrs. Rochester, who has just returned home with a sprained ankle, having fallen from his horse. When Jane mentions to Mrs. Fairfax that Rochester suggests that his mannerisms are the result of a difficult personal history. Rochester was something of a family outcast, and when his father died, his older brother inherited Thornfield. Their conversation turns to the concepts of sin, forgiveness, and redemption. When he discovered that Celine was engaged in relations with another man, Rochester ended the relationship. She hears what sound like fingers brushing against the walls, and an eerie laugh soon emanates from the hallway. Jane dashes into his room and finds his bed curtains ablaze. He sleeps on the library sofa for the remainder of the night. Chapter XVI The next morning, Jane is shocked to learn that the near tragedy of the night before has caused no scandal. The servants believe Rochester to have fallen asleep with a lit candle by his bed, and even Grace Poole shows no sign of guilt or remorse. Jane cannot imagine why an attempted murderer is allowed to continue working at Thornfield. She realizes that she is beginning to have feelings for Rochester and is disappointed that he will be away from Thornfield for several days. He has left to attend a party where he will be in the company of Blanche Ingram, a beautiful lady. Jane scolds herself for being disappointed by the news, and she resolves to restrain her flights of imaginative fancy by comparing her own portrait to one she has drawn of Blanche Ingram, noting how much plainer she is than the beautiful Blanche. Chapter XVII Rochester has been gone for a week, and Jane is dismayed to learn that he may choose to depart for continental Europe without returning to Thornfield—according to Mrs. Fairfax, he could be gone for more than a year. A week later, however, Mrs. Fairfax receives word that Rochester will arrive in three days with a large group of guests. While she waits, Jane continues to be amazed by the apparently normal relations the strange, self-isolated Grace Poole enjoys with the rest of the staff. Rochester arrives at last, accompanied by a party of elegant and aristocratic guests. Jane is forced to join the group but spends the evening watching them from a window seat. Jane tries to leave the party, but Rochester stops her. He grudgingly allows her to go when he sees the tears brimming in her eyes. As they part, Rochester nearly lets slip more than he intends. Rochester and Blanche compete as a team at charades. From watching their interaction, Jane believes that they will be married soon though they do not seem to love one another. Blanche would be marrying Rochester for his wealth, and he for her beauty and her social position. One day, a strange man named Mr. Mason arrives at Thornfield. Jane dislikes him at once because of his vacant eyes and his slowness, but she learns from him that Rochester once lived in the West Indies, as he himself has done. Blanche Ingram goes first, and when she returns from her talk with the gypsy woman she looks keenly disappointed. The gypsy woman seems to know a great deal about Jane and tells her that she is very close to happiness.

After the child is weaned about the age of four or five in Biblical times, Hannah does as promised and turns her son over to the priest Eli to raise Samuel in the service of God. Channah or Chana are names rooted in Hebrew tradition, while Hannah is more or less the English version, popularized by the Puritans in the 16th and 17th centuries in keeping with their customs of adopting Old Testament names for their children as an act of modesty. Today Hannah is a supremely popular name all over the Western World. Although the name has a modern and sometimes trendy feel to it, it is an age-old classic with a charming sound that never goes out of style. It is a free and lightweight installation from Adobe.
