Think of Moses and the nation of Israel. Deliverance from bondage in Egypt: Trapped by the Red Sea: The parting of the waters: Journey into the wilderness: Photo by ricorocks - MorgueFile When I think of wilderness immediately trees come to mind. I picture something like a national park out west. The wilderness of the Scriptures, however, was more like a desert. Is there a tour bus? The truth is that God led the people of Israel into the wilderness, just as He led Jesus into the wilderness to be tempted after His water baptism. This leads one to believe that God is in the habit of guiding His children into desolate places. Does He have a cruel streak? No, He simply sees wisdom in using the barren to produce the fruitful. There are specific things that God seeks to accomplish in the wilderness. The length of our stay depends upon our willingness to learn and to yield. A people of promise embraced a paradigm of hopelessness. Two weeks became 40 years. A journey to a new life became a walk of death. Today it is quite rare for God to lead His people into a physical wilderness. But from a spiritual perspective, dry, desolate places abound—and with no shortage of savage tribes and wild beasts. But before we go there a critical truth must be established. God leads His children through dry, desolate places, but He never wants us to be dry in our hearts! His promise is that we will always be well-watered gardens. How deep is His love that He would take us through the wilderness in order to teach us to draw upon a never-ending flow of living water!

Maccabees, the Second Book of the, a second history of the Maccabean revolt, written from a different perspective than 1 Maccabees. Where the latter is concerned to praise Judas, Jonathan, and Simon for their role in the liberation of the Jewish people from Seleucid oppression, 2 Maccabees focuses upon the insult to the Temple and its cult, for which it holds the Jewish Hellenizers primarily responsible. Judas Maccabeus is honored as the sole leader of the resistance. The narrative concludes with his defeat of Nicanor, the Syrian governor of Judea. The period covered by 2 Maccabees is about b. Two letters from Jews in Jerusalem to the Egyptian Jewish community concerning the new festival of Hanukkah 1: The preface to the epitome 2: A threat to the Temple during the high-priesthood of Onias III is thwarted by a supernatural manifestation 3: The desecration of the Temple by Antiochus IV Epiphanes, here pictured as a response to a revolt against the Hellenistic reforms rather than, as in 1 Maccabees, an effort to impose a state religion on the Jews chap. Tales of martyrdom chaps. Moses 9; and Wisd. Antiochus is struck down by God and repents upon his deathbed, leading to the purification and rededication of the Temple by Judas 9: Judas defends Jews in Palestine chap. Judas rebuffs an effort by Antiochus V to reinstall Menelaus, high priest during the Hellenistic reforms chap. Judas defeats and kills Nicanor who has undertaken a second campaign following a vision of the martyred Onias III, the pious high priest, in which Judas receives a sword to defeat his adversaries. It represents an epitome, or condensation, of a five-volume history written by an otherwise unknown Jason of Cyrene probably sometime after b. The original language was Greek, and the condensation has survived as a part of the Septuagint, or Greek version of the ot. Protestants treat it as a part of the Apocrypha, while Catholics classify it as one of the deuterocanonical books. The writer develops a theology of history in 6: Repentance, however, ensures that God will protect the Jews from their enemies by sending a leader like Judas and by responding from heaven with a manifestation of supernatural power in defense of Temple or people 2: The righteous who perish in the process can expect the resurrection of the dead 7: Sin offerings on the part of the dead are also possible

More specifically, however, dss is restricted to the Qumran scrolls and fragments, which are the most important of the finds. Specific finds are the following: The total number of texts found in Qumran Cave Eleven is not known, but sixteen have been published in whole or in part. The texts from Caves One through Three and Five through Ten have been fully published, as have the majority from Cave Eleven, but approximately seventy percent of those from Cave Four still await publication since ! The texts from Qumran are dated roughly between the end of the third century b. The Hebrew and Aramaic documents were written in four basic scripts, which permit their palaeographic dating within a fifty-year margin of error: Archaic Script end of the third century to b. The majority of the Qumran texts are in the Hasmonean and Herodian scripts, as are those of Masada. The texts from Khirbet Mird are of later date roughly fifth to eighth centuries a. Albright , are important for the light they shed on three areas: Palestinian Judaism before and at the beginning of the Christian era; the transmission of the ot text in the same period; and the Palestinian background of the nt. Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes. He devotes his longest description to the Essenes, and, even though what is learned from the dss about the Qumran community does not agree in every detail with this description, most modern scholars have accepted the identification of the Qumran community with the Essenes or some branch of them. Thus, the Qumran scrolls would represent the library of this sect. The sectarian writings in the Qumran literature provide an almost complete copy of the Essene rule book Manual of Discipline and ten fragmentary copies of it from Cave Four not yet published. This text differs from another, previously known rule book of the sect, the Damascus Document, found in the Cairo Genizah, extensive copies of which came to light in Caves Four, Five, and Six. How to relate these two rule books is a major problem of interpretation and of understanding the sect. Further fragmentary copies of both texts were found in Cave Four but are only partially published. This mode is quite different from anything in the later writings of the rabbis third to fifth centuries a. We also learn of the messianic expectations of this sect: Transmission of ot Text: Prior to the discovery of the dss, the oldest copy of any extended portion of the Hebrew Bible was dated a. In Cave One, however, a full text of Isaiah was found, dated palaeographically to b. The differences between the Qumran text and the Masoretic Text mt , the Hebrew text preserved from medieval manuscripts, separated in date by a thousand years, amounted to thirteen significant variants and a host of insignificant spelling differences, which have proved a gold mine for the study of first-century b. This illustrated the care with which the text of Isaiah had been transmitted over the centuries. When Cave Four was discovered, however, a different picture appeared. For certain books of the ot, especially 1 and 2 Samuel, Jeremiah, and Exodus, there were copies of the Hebrew text, from pre-Christian times, in forms differing from the medieval mt. In some cases, the Qumran biblical texts were closer to the Greek Septuagint lxx ; in others, closer to the Samaritan Pentateuch. It is now apparent that these differing ancient text forms of the ot deserve far greater care and attention than they received in the past. The lxx, for example, is now seen not just as a poor, tendentious translation of the Hebrew, but rather as a witness to a different pre-Christian Hebrew text form. Moreover, there appear to have been three local text types in pre-Christian times: Eventually probably between a. Palestinian Background of nt: So far, no mention has been found in these thoroughly Jewish writings of Jesus, John the Baptist, or early Christians. Many of the tenets and practices of the Essene community, however, as seen in the dss, provide a new and interesting background for aspects of nt writings. The use of isolated ot quotations in the nt resembles many of the similar quotations of the ot in the dss; the formulas introducing such quotations in the nt are far closer to Qumran introductory formulas than to those in the Mishnah the earliest part of the rabbinic writings. Parallels have been found for many items and expressions in the Gospels of Matthew and John, in the Pauline corpus, and in the Letter to the Hebrews.
