Harpsichord Concerto No.8 in D minor, BWV (fragment) Concerto for 2 Harpsichords in C minor, BWV Concerto for 2 Harpsichords in C major, BWV

There are seven complete concertos for a single harpsichord BWV 1061, three concertos for two harpsichords BWV 1062, two concertos for three harpsichords BWV 1063 and 1064, and one concerto for four harpsichords BWV 1065. Two other concertos include solo harpsichord parts: In addition, there is a nine-bar concerto fragment for harpsichord BWV 1066 which adds an oboe to the strings and continuo. In many cases, only the harpsichord version has survived. They are among the first concertos for keyboard instrument ever written. Several of these earlier models are extant. The works he performed there have not been identified. More than a year later he composed several cantatas with an organ obligato part. Both of them, corresponded with Forkel and both remained in the parental home until the early 1700s: Wilhelm Friedemann departed in 1703 to take up his appointment as organist at the Sophienkirche in Dresden; and in Carl Philipp Emanuel moved to the university in Frankfurt to continue training for his short-lived legal career. There are also first-hand accounts of music-making by the entire Bach family, although these probably date from the 1700s during visits to Leipzig by the two elder sons: Sonnenkalb recorded that house-concerts were frequent and involved Bach together with his two elder sons, two of his younger sons—Johann Christoph Friedrich and Johann Christian—as well as his son-in-law Johann Christoph Altnickol. It is also known that Wilhelm Friedemann visited his father for one month in 1703 with two distinguished lutenists one of them was Sylvius Weiss, which would have provided further opportunities for domestic music-making. The arrangement of the organ sonatas, BWV 1067, for two harpsichords with each player providing the pedal part in the left hand, is also presumed to have originated as Hausmusik, a duet for the elder sons. The orchestral parts on the other hand were executed as a fair copy. Establishing the history or purpose of any of the harpsichord concertos, however, is not a straightforward task. In particular this makes it hard not only to determine the place, time and purpose of the original compositions but even to determine the original key and intended instrument. Whether Bach ever wrote violin concertos expressly for them must remain undecided. In this branch of art he devoted himself chiefly at Leipzig to the clavier concerto. II, 1703, quoted in Rampe, p. Engraving of Katherinenstrasse in Leipzig. Bach served as director from spring to summer 1703; and again from October until or 1704. Williams has also speculated that it might not be mere coincidence that the timing matched the publication of the first ever collection of keyboard concertos, the widely acclaimed and well-selling Organ concertos, Op. 10. They were almost certainly originally conceived for a small chamber group, with one instrument per desk, even if performed on one of the newly developed fortepianos, which only gradually acquired the potential for producing a louder dynamic. The keyboard writing also conforms to a practice that lasted until the early nineteenth century, namely the soloist played along with the orchestra in tutti sections, only coming into prominence in solo passages. The concerto BWV 1061 and fragment BWV 1066 are at the end of the score, but they are an earlier attempt at a set of works as shown by an additional J.

Boris Ord Total Time: At the beginning of the s, two new Leipzig Collegia, which were to enjoy a comparatively long existence, were founded by two young men at the University, one in by Georg Philipp Telemann, the other six years later by Johann Friedrich Fasch. In the spring of , Schott moved to a new position in Gotha, and Bach took over directorship of the Collegium. Clearly an enthusiastic music lover and most probably a competent musician, Zimmermann frequently re-equipped his establishment with the latest musical instruments for use by the Collegium and other musical guests, one of his prize possessions in the late s being "a clavcymbel of large size and range of expressivity" which was a Leipzig attraction in itself. German harpsichords were larger and fuller in tone than their Italian and French contemporaries, with a much wider range of sound. The new instrument would certainly have had two, possibly three manuals, and would probably have been the work of the preeminent Hamburg builder Hieronymus Albrecht Hass. Occasionally, too, vocal music might be given; such an example is the Coffee Cantata, BWV , first presented in . It is also on record that works of Handel, Vivaldi, Telemann, Locatelli, Albinoni and others were performed. The harpsichord had indeed made an ideal continuo instrument, its percussive action serving the vital functions of keeping the players together and maintaining the tempo. It is unfortunate that even today this is not fully appreciated by conductors and recording engineers who continue to treat the harpsichord as a background player even in a harpsichord concerto. We hope you will find in these recordings that the harpsichords are a little better served. Included here is a work for two harpsichords, BWV . While the work stands perfectly well on its own as the listener may judge, it is normally heard today with orchestral accompaniment, though the originator of this addition is not known. The middle movement remains without orchestra. He remained its director from until the death of Gottfried Zimmermann in , possibly several years thereafter. The pizzicati appearing in the second movement in most editions have no direct authority from Bach, therefore, and they do not accord with his practice in other music of a similar kind. My own opinion is that they are probably a later addition and are best omitted. Four Goff harpsichords were lined up on stage, with harpsichordists Thurston Dart, George Malcolm, Denis Vaughan and others variously taking part year by year. The harpsichordists had enormous fun, bobbing and nodding between themselves while orchestra and conductor struggled to keep pace. They were also equipped with anything from 2 to 7 foot-pedals for use in making quick registration changes. Stops could also be "half drawn", allowing subtle changes of volume. The popularity of these concerts produced two original compositions written specially for the occasion: Read more about Thomas Goff at www.
