Holding Hands with God The readings of Isaiah are so moving during Advent, calling us to consider our relationship with God in new ways. Isaiah invites us to consider a relationship with God on a very deep and personal level, to feel comforted, loved and protected.

If you want victory over every area of your life, if you want real change, if you want the blessings of the Lord and His favor, then this is a truth you must learn: I met the Lord for the first time when I was Alone in my living room, I invited Jesus into my life and for the first time I felt His tangible presence. Our relationship began that day but it would take me another six years before I would begin to see real change and victory in my life. See, I thought that by inviting Jesus into my life that I would now have happiness, health, and wealth. He was going to fix all my problems and pour His blessings out on me endlessly with no requirements of me. Over the next 6 years I worked in the adult entertainment industry in multiple cities. I was an alcoholic, drug user, bisexual, and suffered from suicide ideation, cutting, personality disorders, PTSD, and depression. I was absolutely miserable and no matter how hard I tried, I could not make my life or myself better. I blamed God often and was very angry with Him for "making me this way" and not changing my life and blessing me. The change was my choice to make. When we make that choice, then He gives the grace, which is empowerment, for us to rise up and walk in it. That day finally came for me in late when I discovered I was pregnant with my first child. Up until that point, I wanted God but I also wanted to continue drinking, going out every night, and partaking of everything this world had to offer. But once I discovered I was pregnant, that was my rock bottom. No more going out and partying, no more drinking, no more drugs, no more indulging in the pleasures of this world. Where He wanted me to go I would go The Bible gives us clear guidelines for godly living and I was committed to pleasing Him because I knew He was my only hope. My husband, then boyfriend, and I made that choice of surrender together. We were married and baptized only months later and have been sold out for Jesus since that time. Things finally began to change. My body healed, my mind began to heal, I no longer desired to do the things I used to do, and I was sober, blessed, happy, healthy, and ready to share this hope with the world! To be friends with the world is to be an enemy of God. Do you not know that friendship with the world is enmity with God? Therefore whoever wishes to be a friend of the world makes himself an enemy of God.

The family smiled, bowed their heads and gave thanks – probably for more than their food. He kept holding hands with God at every prayer-time – even at school when his class prayed! Worship, simply stated, is holding hands with God. God reaches from his sovereignty to the heart of humankind and invites us to come as close to him as we will allow him to come to us. The more we sense the presence of God, the more we want to be in his presence. We can only acknowledge it and choose to live in it. Life reaches its intended height when we grasp the reality that God is constantly with us – and wants to be. A favorite hymn states our potential relationship with him: My God and I go in the fields together. We walk and talk as good friends should and do. We clasp our hands; our voices ring with laughter. Can you imagine – a God so near you can hold his hands? The touch of the Almighty. A precious three-year-old boy in our church suffers the rarest type of cancer. A tumor the size of a grapefruit was removed from his stomach, along with a kidney. His prognosis was uncertain but somewhat promising at the time of his surgery. His grandmother, a godly woman, was extremely concerned about her grandson, but life was following a relatively normal course several months after the surgery. While on a weekend outing with close friends, she dreamed a perplexing dream. The place and the faces in the dream were vague, but the experience was most vivid. She sat in a group of people gathered for worship. As they praised God she felt strength come into her body at the simple mention of his name. The more she said his name in worship the more strength she felt. And the more strength she felt, the more she wanted to worship. Next morning, she shared the dream with her friends and asked if they attached any special significance to it. Three spots showed up on his lungs. Although grieved by the news, she felt the significance of her dream. For her it meant she was to praise and worship her sovereign God in the face of this unfair tragedy. He would supply the needed strength for her and her family. A group of believers gathers every Monday evening in earnest prayer, expecting the hand of God to touch and heal this child. Her strength and insights are teaching us powerful lessons in praise and worship and prayer. Without hearing someone we interpret conversation simply by watching their hands. Hands rival faces as the most expressive part of conversation. Some people literally could not talk if their hands were tied. Did you see any hands expressing victory or defeat in the recent Olympics? A child who needs attention instinctively thrusts hands toward the parent. A loving parent can scarcely refuse to respond. I wonder if God uses his hands when he talks about us? Do we have nothing to express? A few Sundays back as I led a lengthy period of praise and worship, the church stood. A time of high-spirited praise songs shifted toward a more reflective and worshipful mood, so I motioned for the people to sit down. One man remained standing on the second row with his eyes closed and his hands raised, unaware that everyone around him had sat down. He was deeply involved in the worship he was offering. All eyes were on him as he continued standing through another song. His wife, seated by his side, chose not to disturb him. A few of the teens giggled a bit; then they stopped. Proposal – In the privacy of your home, worship the Lord using your hands. Clap for joy as you sing songs of praise. Raise your hands as you pray, giving him honor and receiving his touch. See if your communication with him is not enriched. Peek into a church sometime where you hear silence. You may think nothing is being said, but the hands may tell a different story. Hands touching eternity bring into focus a God who has come near. Hands are for giving and receiving. Hands may respond when words are not appropriate.

3: "Hold To God's Unchanging Hand" And You Will Never Go Wrong

Holding Hands with God is a collection of miraculous healings from the sufferings of sexual abuse, a divorce, a miscarriage, a child's death, and a spouse's death. The stories of these women are victories of Grace from a Catholic perspective.

We will ponder from this thought: Together with this reflection is its hymn from Roy Acuff. Allow us to take our time today, walk through this transcript, and pull out some chunks of faith that will encourage each one of us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or danger, or sword? Does it mean he no longer loves us if we face distress or disaster, are wronged, starving, penniless, in danger, or endangered with death? The bible goes on to tell us that all things work together for the good. The love of God is with us according to His purpose. The verse ends by telling us that there is no separation from the love of Christ. Sum of the Matter Note these things and reflect on these matters, every day. Christ loves us now and always. The reason we say nothing will separate us from the love of Christ is that Christ is alive and is still loving us now. He is our mediator, seeing to it that his work is not temporarily finished, but by bringing us undying joy. His love is not a memory. This almighty, effective, caring love does not spare us from mishaps in this life but brings us safely to everlasting joy with God. Overall, Jesus Christ greatly loves his people. The Bible and this song actually makes a statement that says, "Since or because God is for us, who could be against us? God is the same yesterday, today, and forever. We know how much you adore our Creator. Read more life-changing stories and hear heartwarming gospel songs by visiting our website on Country Thang Daily.

Walking w/God & Holding hands w/the Devil. Scripture Reading: Genesis Introduction: You know the old story of how to boil a frog. You don't put him in a pot of boiling water.

Pulpit Commentary Verse God himself will be their Strength, will personally interfere on their behalf, taking them as it were by their right hand. Saying unto thee; rather, I who say to thee. Matthew Henry Commentary I will strengthen thee. Art thou in want of friends? I will help thee in the time of need. Art thou ready to fall? I will uphold thee with that the right hand which is full of righteousness, dealing forth rewards and punishments. It is the worm Jacob; so little, so weak, so despised and trampled on by every body. The Lord will help them, for he is their Redeemer. The Lord will make Jacob to become a threshing instrument. God will make him fit for use, new, and having sharp spikes. This has fulfilment in the triumphs of the gospel of Christ, and of all faithful followers of Christ, over the power of darkness. God has provided comforts to supply all their wants, and to answer all their prayers. Our way to heaven lies through the wilderness of this world. The soul of man is in want, and seeks for satisfaction; but becomes weary of seeking that in the world, which is not to be had in it. Yet they shall have a constant supply, where one would least expect it. I will open rivers of grace, rivers of living water, which Christ spake of the Spirit, Joh 7: When God sets up his church in the Gentile wilderness, there shall be a great change, as if thorns and briers were turned into cedars, and fir-trees, and myrtles. These blessings are kept for the poor in spirit, who long for Divine enlightening, pardon, and holiness. And God will render their barren souls fruitful in the grace of his Spirit, that all who behold may consider it.

Every missing lamb matters. As believers, we are instructed to study the Bible and meditate upon its meaning for our lives. There are those who claim to be Christians who lie, cheat, steal, etc. Lot is one who exemplifies for us someone who fell into the trap of the Devil and tried to walk with God and hold hands with the Devil. Jesus said in Matthew 6: Ye cannot serve God and mammon money. His whole life seems to have been tinged with earthly colorings, and to have been struck through with the spirit of the world. He preferred to live on the borderland of true Christian experience, rather than in the land itself, and to be quite a little more at home with the filthy Sodomites than with the praying household of his Uncle Abram. He was dominated by the spirit of the world! The first mistake that Lot made was that he got his eyes off of what God wanted for him, and he began to look at the wealth of the world. You see, he saw this well watered plain of the Jordan. It was a beautiful place with lots of green luscious grass and water for all of his herds. He looked at the nearby cities Sodom and Gomorrah and decided that he would like to have this area. So, in one fatal decision he chose the well watered plains of the Jordan. He chose the world. He allowed worldly consideration alone to move him, good water, fine pastures, close to a city market, good business opportunities, and a splendid chance to make money!! Lot looked towards Sodom. So it is that thousands of Christians are going down today in the same way. They are being swallowed up in a maelstrom of worldliness. They leave their souls out of account and do not consult God when making decisions. Lot did not make his decision on what God wanted; he made his decision based upon his own desire.

By Thursday, the girls had figured this out and, when both my hands were occupied, they instead began holding one another's hands in moments of discomfort, depending on each other for support. That is God's kingdom.

For example, when Stephen is filled with the "holy spirit" he looks to heaven and sees Jesus standing by the right hand of God Acts 7: There are three occasions in the Gospels when the voice of God is heard, and the hand of God often represents this in visual art. Clothed hand clutching wreath, San Clemente, Rome , "â€” In Christian art, the hand of God has traditionally been understood as an artistic metaphor that is not intended to indicate that the deity was physically present or seen in any subject depicted. In the late antique and early medieval periods, the representation of the full-bodied figure of God the Father would have been considered a grave violation of the Second Commandment. Gertrud Schiller distinguishes three functions of the hand in Christian art: A cloud is mentioned as the source of the voice of God in the gospel accounts of the Transfiguration of Jesus see below. Several of the examples in the Dura Europos synagogue see below show a good part of the forearm as well as the hand, which is not found in surviving Christian examples, and most show an open palm, sometimes with the fingers spread out. Later examples in Jewish art are closer in form to Christian styles. In Christian art, the hand of God usually occupies the form of a blessing gesture, if they are not performing an action, though some just show an open hand. The normal blessing gesture is to point with the index and next finger, with the other fingers curled back and thumb relaxed. This is formed by crossing the thumb and little finger inside the palm, with only the forefinger and next one extended, [15] or a variant of this. Especially in Roman mosaics, but also in some German imperial commissions, for example on the Lothair Cross , the hand is clenched around a wreath that goes upwards, and behind which the arm then disappears, forming a tidy circular motif. Especially in these examples, the hand may show the sleeve of a garment, sometimes of two layers, as at San Clemente, Rome. In blessing forms the hand often has a halo , which also may provide a convenient termination point. This may or may not be a cruciform halo, indicating the divinity, and specifically the Logos , or Pre-existing Christ see below. Visigothic capital with the Sacrifice of Isaac. The hand is regularly seen in depictions of certain scenes, though it may occur on occasion in a much wider range. In Christian art the hand will often actually represent the hand of God the Son , or the Logos; this is demonstrated when later depictions start to substitute for the Hand a small half-length portrait of Christ as Logos in a similar circular frame. It is nearly always Christ in the East, but in the West God the Father will sometimes be shown in this way. However, in many contexts the person of the Trinity intended cannot be confirmed from the image alone, except in those images, like the Baptism of Christ , where Jesus the Incarnate Christ is also present, where the hand is clearly that of God the Father. Later Eastern Orthodox images often identify Hands as the Logos with the usual monogram used in icons. More often, God was shown in this story using the conventional depiction of Jesus representing the pre-existent Christ or Logos , who was seen as the Creator by Early Christian writers, [18] The story of Adam and Eve was the Old Testament subject most frequently seen in Christian art that needed a pictorial representation of God. A well known modern variant of the traditional hand motif is a sculpture of by Auguste Rodin called the Hand of God, which shows a gigantic hand creating Adam and Eve. The Sacrifice of Isaac first appears in Christian art in 4th century depictions from the Roman catacombs and sarcophagi, as well as pieces like a fragment from a marble table from Cyprus. Some depictions have the hand passing Moses the Tablets of the Law , found in the Roman catacombs, various Bibles see gallery , the Paris Psalter , and in mosaic in the Basilica of San Vitale , Ravenna. In it was a scroll, which he unrolled before me. On both sides of it were written words of lament and mourning and woe" [22] and this and other moments from Ezekiel sometimes include the hand. In the Paris Psalter , Moses, Jonah and Isaiah are all shown blessed by hands, from which rays of light come. Other prophets are sometimes also shown with the hand. The hand can appear in other contexts; the Carolingian Utrecht Psalter atypically illustrates nearly all the Psalms , probably following an Antique model, and shows the hand in at least 27 of these images, despite also using a figure of Christ-as-God in the heavens even more frequently. The story in Daniel 5: Moses receives the Tablets, c. Ascension of Christ and Noli me tangere , c.

See below for a similar Ascension years later. New Testament imagery[ edit ] In depictions of the Life of Christ , the hand often appears at the Baptism of Christ representing the voice of God, above the dove representing the Holy Spirit , which is much more common, thus showing the whole Trinity as present and active. At that moment heaven was opened, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and lighting on him. And a voice from heaven said, "This is my Son, whom I love; with him I am well pleased. The hand is mostly found in Baptisms between the 6th e. Rabbula Gospels and 11th centuries. The hand is found in some Western and later Armenian scenes of the Transfiguration of Jesus , [26] where again the Synoptic Gospels have the voice of God speaking, this time from a cloud. This is the third and final occasion when the voice of God is mentioned in the gospels, this time only in the Gospel of John The earliest known example is in the St Augustine Gospels of c. The hand represents divine approval, and specifically acceptance of his sacrifice, [29] and possibly also the storm mentioned in the gospels. The hand may be seen in the Ascension of Christ , sometimes, as in the Drogo Sacramentary , reaching down and clasping that of Christ, as though to pull him up into the clouds. The ivory plaque now in Munich left with such a depiction is possibly the earliest representation of the Ascension to survive. In Eastern Orthodox icons of the Last Judgement , the hand often holds the scales in which souls are weighed in the West Saint Michael typically does this. The hand may emerge from the Hetoimasia usually present, and is typically huge in size compared to the full figures nearby in the composition. The upper part of the semi-dome depicts the Transfiguration. Ascension from the Drogo Sacramentary , c. The hand often blesses rulers from above, especially in Carolingian and Ottonian works, and coins. A posthumous coin of Constantine the Great the "deification issue" had shown the hand reaching down to pull up a veiled figure of Constantine in a quadriga , in a famously mixed message that combined pagan conventions, where an eagle drew deified emperors up to the heavens, with Christian iconography. From the late 4th century coins of Late Antique rulers such as Arcadius and his empress , Galla Placidia and others show them being crowned by it " it was in fact mostly used for empresses, and often only appears on issues from the Eastern Empire. The object now in the Louvre is a recreation, made for Napoleon or a restored Bourbon king, of the original, which was destroyed in the French Revolution , although the original ivory hand has survived now displayed separately. Engraved gems are used for an authentic medieval feel. Here the hand represents the justice-dispensing power of God as being literally in the hands of the king. Charlemagne , flanked by two popes, is crowned, manuscript of c. The emperor is crowned by the hand.

7: Holding Hands with God - Tom Eggebrecht

Holding Hands with God is about one mans conversion from atheist evolutionist to Christ-centered believer by divine intervention. It is a story about faith, hope, love, and a true miracle from God.

You know the old story of how to boil a frog. Then you put him on the stove, and little by little the water gets warm. Then it gets to Jacuzzi level, and he begins to be a little alarmed. They try to live as close to the world as possible. And one day we realize the danger: There are those who claim to be Christians who lie, cheat, steal, etc. This morning I would like to talk to you about Lot. Lot is one who exemplifies for us someone who fell into the trap of the Devil and tried to walk with God and hold hands with the Devil. Jesus said in Matthew 6: Ye cannot serve God and mammon money. In truth, these people are after both worlds. They make sure of this, and they hope not to miss the felicity of the next. He preferred to live on the borderland of true Christian experience, rather than in the land itself, and to be quite a little more at home with the filthy Sodomites than with the praying household of his Uncle Abram. He was dominated by the spirit of the world! This morning I want to talk to you about how Lot ended up in the midst of the wicked and perverse city of Sodom. How did a man with so much going for him with a godly uncle like Abraham, how did he end up in such terrible condition as what we just read about in Genesis 19? Well, Lot ended up in Sodom because heâ€¦ I. Lot Looked toward Sodom. It is here that the underlying principles of these two men, Abraham and Lot, come to surface. It is here that we see their true character. Abraham, to whom the whole land had been promised, showed a deep determination to honor God even in the presence of the heathen people with whom they were now living. Whatever loss he might suffer, he would not fight with his nephew Lot before them. So, he unselfishly gave up his claim to the land and generously offered to Lot the first choice of the whole land.

It is here in Romans the 8th Chapter starting at the 35th verse and ending with the 39th verse. The Apostle Paul starts out Chapter 8 by telling us that there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. He then goes on to tell us that all things work together for good to them that love God and called according to his purpose. The chapter closes out here in our text where Paul concludes with telling us that there is no separation from the love of Christ. That is a question that each and every one of us must answer for ourselves. Then Paul comes to us in the next verse by quoting Psalms Christians are constantly being persecuted by the World. Paul tells us here in the last two verses of our text and at the close of this chapter: For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Paul starts of the 38th verse by saying: Then the next part of verse 38 deals with life: Then the rest of the verse reads as such: The first part says: Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The first part of hits verse says: Nor height, nor depth which may refer to the space age in which we live. Allow me to encourage the Pastor on today for a few moments of your time before I close this message out. For the Prophet Isaiah says in the 40th chapter and verses Hast thou not heard that the everlasting God, the LORD, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? There is no searching of his understanding. This is want to encourage the Pastor and the Church with on today 31 But they that wait upon the LORD shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint. For I heard the song writer say:

9: Just Kids - Chapter 5, Holding Hands With God Summary & Analysis

You Cannot Walk With God And Hold Hands With The Devil. I met the Lord for the first time when I was Alone in my living room, I invited Jesus into my life and for the first time I felt His tangible presence.

Email If we will walk hand in hand with Him in His paths, we will go forward with faith and never feel alone. In the eyes and hearts of many people in the world today, there is evidence of doubt, fear, and hopelessness. Much of the insecurity in the world has filtered into our homes and personal lives. No matter what our age or circumstance, we all have a need to know that we have power in the present and hope in the future. Listen to the words of Mormon: Know ye not that he hath all power? Hands are one of the symbolically expressive parts of the body. Thus, hands signify power and strength. The extended hand of our living prophet, President Gordon B. Hinckley, strengthens, lifts, and inspires people all across the world. To be in the hands of God would suggest that we are not only under His watchful care but also that we are guarded and protected by His wondrous power. Throughout the scriptures, reference is made to the hand of the Lord. His divine assistance is evidenced over and over again. His powerful hands created worlds, and yet they were gentle enough to bless the little children. When He lays His hand upon us, we, like John, can be alive in Him. Twenty-four years ago, our tiny newborn son struggled for his life in the intensive care unit of a hospital. His lungs were not fully developed because of his premature birth, and he desperately fought for each breath of air. He was so small but with so much will to live. As I put my trembling hand through the small opening into the isolette, I felt so inadequate and powerless. I took hold of the tiny but perfect hand of our newborn son, and there was a powerful spiritual connection never to be forgotten. Two fingers from each of my hands covered his tiny head as I administered to him. I then humbly realized that my quivering hands held power and authority well beyond my own. Following that blessing, in a moment of emotional peace, my eternal companion and I looked at each other across the isolette, feeling the spirit of renewed hope and comfort born of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and in the personal effect of His Atonement. It was a powerful witness of His love for an infant son who had just left His presence. We were then better prepared to accept His will for our son. We truly felt we had placed our hands in the hands of the Savior. With each breath and with each incremental bit of progress, we expressed prayerful thanks. The great plan of happiness includes a proverbial roller coaster of challenging times along with the most joyful times. Yes, we all have our moments of difficulty and heartbreak. Occasionally, they are so difficult for us that we just want to give up. There are times when our steps are unsteady, when we feel discouraged and even reach out in desperation. Every one of us needs to know that we can go on in the strength of the Lord. We can put our hand in His, and we will feel His sustaining presence lift us to heights unattainable alone. We must trust in the Lord. If we give ourselves freely to Him, our burdens will be lifted and our hearts will be consoled. Elder Scott has recently counseled: How do we learn to trust? How do we learn to extend our hand and connect to the comfort provided by the Lord? Clear instruction came from the Lord to Joseph Smith: Here are four keys:
