; How to Make Your Mark There has never been a better time for one person, with brains and commitment, to have a huge impact on a company, on an industry — even on the world.

There has never been a better time for one person, with brains and commitment, to have a huge impact on a company, on an industry — even on the world. By Cheryl Dahle long Read We all have different approaches to measuring our worth at work. Some of us tally success in dollars or promotions. But sooner or later, in one way or another, most of us will look back on our work life and wonder, What is my legacy? Incidentally, that has inspired a lot of incompetent people to take a shot as well. This story is about three people from very different walks of life, in very different stages of their lives. But they have each figured out how to make their mark. The first, a PR guru turned social evangelist, aims to mass-market a new brand of feminism by creating a multimedia business juggernaut. The second is an ordinary man doing extraordinary things to help find a cure for multiple sclerosis. And the third is an inventor who understood early on the real potential of the Web and influenced the evolution of the dotcom economy. Absolutely Determined The soundstage at Channel 2 is awash in color — Grecian pillars sponge-painted in peach and salmon, violet-blue backdrops with splashes of green foliage and amber flowers. She is radiant in an ocher-colored, floor-length silk skirt, tunic, and frilly shawl — the perfect antisuit, a conscious rejection of any corporate uniform. Nearly three years of work has led Franks to this moment: In the next four hours, she will tape a TV special to be aired on public television throughout the United States this spring. Women work differently from men, and to embrace those differences is to embrace an agenda of change for the workplace and for women. Her goal is to mass-market her own brand of feminism — and in the process, to make her mark on the world. The book was the inspiration for this TV special, as well as for a plethora of multimedia and product ventures now being developed under the SEED Sustainable Enterprise and Empowerment Dynamics brand name, including a Web site with regular radio and video broadcasts, merchandise such as stationery and luggage, and live events and workshops. But the question is, How do you market a new way of thinking in a way that makes women feel safe without making men feel threatened? Franks takes a deep breath and steps into the spotlight. Actually, Franks has spent much of her life in the spotlight — but as a star maker, not as a star herself. At age 21, when she grew bored of writing articles for fashion magazines, she founded a PR company that would later become legendary. Lynne Franks PR was the agency of choice for the trendiest fashion and entertainment personalities. She became famous for the raucous parties that she threw, where all of the glitterati were guaranteed to show. Meanwhile, she allowed the business to push her into a cycle of hour days and endless partying. Her trendy, high-stress life became the inspiration for a British cult-television show called Absolutely Fabulous! In , burned out by her high-profile, punishing lifestyle, as well as by the struggle of raising two children and rescuing a disintegrating marriage, Franks stepped back. From the outside, she appeared to have everything: But she felt hollow. Where was the meaning in her work? What was she passionate about? How could she make time for the things that mattered? But I would just run from meeting to meeting, to events, to lunch, to more meetings. She also did publicity for nonprofit events and met with women entrepreneurs. After five years of traveling and chronicling her voyage in her autobiography, Absolutely Now! Overlook Press, , Franks felt that she had finally found her calling — the way that she was intended to make her mark. The statistics that she uncovered during her research bolstered her belief that she was onto something big: Advice about financial statements is shuffled in with sample meditations and exercises to relieve back strain. Franks discusses gearing up emotionally and building a network. She imagines a global network of women entrepreneurs who are actively pursuing their dreams, mentoring other women, and changing the role of business in communities all over the world. She imagines business expertise and encouragement being available to women of all income levels. She sees a consulting practice that helps companies stop losing high-performing women to entrepreneurship by making their environments more women-friendly. She sees a SEED music label for female artists — an inspirational soundtrack for women-owned businesses. She imagines a flourishing for-profit business that will allow her to channel her energy” and that of her SEED network” into helping women in poor nations become entrepreneurs. A catchy dance beat kicks in, and the chorus joins, sounding like a gospel choir. In the mostly female audience, shoulders rock and heads nod. The few people who have heard the song before are mouthing the words or singing along. The young man in the back feeding the script to the TelePrompTer rolls his eyes. Only time will tell if seed becomes the Coca-Cola of women-owned businesses” omnipresent and powerful” or irrelevant and laughable like the macarena. Even Franks has no idea how things will turn out. Work is a very important part of people, but we are bigger than what we do. By chance, his brother and quasi-press manager, Andy, woke up moments before the interview was to start. Two hours later, in the lobby of rock station KISW For four years, Nick Irons has been working full time at raising money to find a cure. The bike ride is just his most recent effort. So far, he has cycled more than 5, miles, pedaling for up to six hours a day, six days a week. It has been a grueling trip. The producer takes Irons back to the studio to join Spike and Bob. Spike and Bob have challenged listeners to call in and give Lauren their best pickup lines. If she likes the line, the guy gets a disposable camera with nude pictures of her inside of it. They mention the Going the Distance Web site, but given the timing, the interview is not likely to bring the results that the Ironses had anticipated. Nick Irons leaves the studio baffled but grinning. Pausing at the elevators, he turns to Andy and starts to laugh. Good luck on the rest of your ride! This is not the first time that Irons has encountered surprises along his trek. Despite scrupulous planning, his endeavor is by its very nature chaotic. But it is his ability to cope with uncertainty, to commit to a goal without knowing how it will be achieved, that has allowed Irons to make his mark. An idealist to the core, he simply believed that he could do the nearly impossible” for no better reason than he decided that he would. For Irons, making his mark was about taking a leap of faith. But I was just committed to the idea. As he flew from LA to DC, he looked out the airplane window and wondered what it would be like to swim the Mississippi River. A competitive swimmer in college, he found the idea intriguing. When he arrived home, he saw that his dad was using a cane for the first time to cope with his ms. Irons instinctively wanted to help but felt powerless. The two thoughts collided on his return trip as he began to develop a plan for his first fund-raiser” swimming more than 1, miles of the Mississippi River, from Minneapolis to Baton Rouge. About a year and a half passed before he stepped into the murky waters of the river, watched by a crowd of news reporters and TV cameras. It was a family project: His brother Andy preceded him in an inflatable boat; his mother, Connie, helped arrange for escort boats and press coverage; his brother John had designed a Web site to promote the swim; and his dad called ahead to hotels in small towns along the river to ask for free lodging. None of which surprised his family one bit. He also had to deal with the politics that come along with full-time fund-raising and nonprofit work. But after he did it and came back the next time with the idea for the bike tour, there was no smiling. Everyone is so busy scrapping for survival that the message gets lost. But he also made it part of his agenda to raise awareness among MS patients of their role in the fund-raising process. He is plainspoken, but his words are heartfelt, and his story is compelling. North, who hosts a national radio show and has interviewed Irons about his swim and his bike ride. In June, when Irons passed through Deming, New Mexico, a local rancher organized a livestock auction as a fund-raiser. A bank in the area gave a three-week-old calf to the auction and asked that the proceeds from its sale go to Irons. Irons stood in the ring holding the calf as the bids came in. Then the person who bought it returned it to the auction to be sold again. And so did the next person. In Cedar Rapids, Iowa, locals organized a black-tie fund-raiser and persuaded one company to buy out the seats at a minor-league Cedar Rapids Kernals game. The money went to Irons. Since then, he has been fund-raising in earnest, speaking to the public about his journey. To Irons, the real effect of his contribution is more subtle. She had read that pregnancy often worsens MS and had decided for that reason not to have children. She also did not want to burden her children with her illness. Success at What Price? Louis Monier and his wife live in a modest three-bedroom home in a suburb just off of famed Sand Hill Road in Silicon Valley. There are plenty of dotcom-ers who flipped companies based on bad ideas and even worse technologies who are parking their brand-new Porsches in garages on Half Moon Bay. His commitment to the technology, and to his team, allowed him to make his mark in ways that were more important to him than cashing in.

A lot of people end up being successful. And some of those successful people end up being rich. But very few people actually make their mark on the world and leave us all better off for having known them. We need more of those people. The only thing I know about the allegedly "too motivated" person is that they are just telling me what they think I want to hear. People spend far too much time trying to mitigate the weaknesses of themselves and others, rather than developing their strengths. So he focused on his strengths, rather than his weaknesses. And so should you. You have strengths, just like Bruce does. And you can use them to make your mark on the world, just like he did. But right now, at this very moment, there are millions of people working hard to be better than you. And since terms like "good" and "better" are subjective and relative, what makes you better today can make you mediocre tomorrow. And if you want to do something as big as making your mark on the world, you can never rest. You can never stop getting better. You can never stop learning. You can never stop working hard. And you must always His music and his writing have been the single biggest influence in my life and shaped me in a way that exceeds even the influence of my parents. And I never again felt like a loser. You are a character in an epic poem But that is not the power of Bruce Springsteen. The power of Bruce Springsteen is that whenever I see Bruce Springsteen do anything, he empties the tank - every time. Make those strengths even stronger. Then go out and empty the tank--every time. 3: From Recruiter To Influencer: How To Make Your Mark On Candidates | SocialTalent

To make your mark, it's critical to focus not only on your desired goals and outcomes, but on the "how's" of your life - the way in which you uniquely choose to contribute and intervene.

Most of the time, we are unaware that we are constantly influencing people around us. How many times do we feel like life is too complicated? The better question to ask is, how many times do we tend to complicate things? If we actually took the time to look outside our busy lives and relax, we would notice how simple and beautiful everything is. Take a nice stroll at the park. Hear the sound of the birds chirping. Lie on the beach and watch the sunrise or sunset. We all know people who are money-hungry. If this happens, chances are you will not be happy because you will be miserable trying to earn money to make yourself happy. Take your interests and your hobbies and create a masterpiece that will lead you to lifelong happiness. Nothing in life comes easy. To accomplish something, we must work hard. Go out there and work for it! Extreme dedication, especially in doing what you love, builds character. It gives you the ability to be proud of yourself and motivates others to follow in your footsteps. There are so many things to be happy about. The best way is to simply smile. Give somebody a hug. Listen to what someone has to say. Lend someone a helping hand. Just the other day, I saw this adorable homeless boy outside the grocery store. I was just opening my chocolate bar as I walked in. I went up to him and gave it to him. Boy, did it put the biggest smile on his face! These small gestures make such a huge difference. Make yourself happy by spreading happiness to others! To me, this is the most important one. Sure, we betray and hurt people all the time, but what is holding onto hate going to do? Take all the negativity that comes your way and turn it into kindness. Why do you take the time out of your day to hate someone or wish harm upon them? What are you going to gain out of it? It will only consume your thoughts and make you unhappy. Instead, love everyone because every day someone brings something new and interesting to our lives that can help us learn and grow. Plus, it takes too much energy to hate. See the good in everything. Forgive those who have wronged you. Give back to our world. The experience will be rewarding and everlasting! Think about how people in this world are different and how each person has their own story. Our world is so diverse, so take the opportunity to travel! Go out of your way to learn about different cultures, explore different cities, and meet amazing new people. The beauty of exploring the world allows you to gain a bigger perspective on life outside of your own! Everyone has some sort of message they may want to share with the world. There are many ways to convey your feelings, whether it be writing, singing, drawing, playing the guitar, etc. It may be scary at first, but the first step is having the courage to share your experiences and perspectives with others. You owe it to yourself to be remembered. How will you leave yours?

And since terms like "good" and "better" are subjective and relative, what makes you better today can make you mediocre tomorrow. And if you want to do something as big as making your mark on the.

They offer a bigger selection of classes and majors, a range of academic and social opportunities, well-funded sports programs, and a distinguished faculty. But on the downside, they have large class sizes and less individual attention, courses taught by teaching assistants instead of professors, little student-teacher interaction, and complicated procedures to get into the classes you want – all the makings for a student to get lost in the crowd. So how can students take advantage of school resources to make the most of their college academic experience instead of just being a number? The mere thought of being one out of thousands of students sounds intimidating, but incoming freshman can rest assured! The college system has built-in resources at your fingertips – you just need to know how and where to find them. One-on-One Attention

The most obvious help universities offer their students is guaranteed academic counseling. Different schools offer different varieties of advisors. Even though there are concerns that students who are taught by T. As instead of the professors are not given the proper education their money says it will, T. As can be quite valuable. Since most professors are busy publishing research and attending conferences, T. As can give students the attention they need. Drop by your T. One way to get this individual help is to attend office hours held either by your professor or T. She attended office hours for a writing class and a math class that helped generate a flow of ideas and eased her anxiety of talking in front of students. Office hours help your professors and T. As recognize you in class or walking around on campus, which is good for your grade in the class and helpful in getting recommendations in the future. Small Communities

Some schools have special organizations catered for specific majors that offer a variety of useful resources to their members. Berkeley has the Biology Scholars Program that has a test bank with old tests and answers available to students to prep for upcoming exams. Phi Delta Epsilon is an international medical fraternity that prides itself off of community service and helping students with a future in medicine. All services are generally exclusive to members only so students should be on the lookout through emails, flyers, or word of mouth to find out if their schools have these programs and the details of the application process. Students with more difficult majors find it beneficial to go to additional sections. Courses generally consist of a lecture of or so students and a section portion where the class is split up into smaller discussion groups headed by a T. Students sign up for a designated section slot, but some students like attending more than one. He encourages students to seek extra help because since sections are optional, this leaves more open spots for motivated students to attend. If group study is your thing and you want to a chance to meet new people, never underestimate the intelligence and kindness of your fellow students. Getting together for study groups is a great way to be social and to learn, as long as you stay focused. At UCSD, students in the same college usually take the same general education courses and live in the same dorms, making it easier to study together. As a freshman at a large university, you have just as much of a chance of interacting with your professor as you would at a small university – you just have to take the initiative. She has seen the school from both the student and administrative perspective and encourages students to put themselves out there to discover hidden student resources. Rather, it teaches students that just because they go to a great and well-known university, they should not feel entitled. Even though there are more restrictions to get into classes you want, I was able to get into a course outside of my major by seeking the help of an academic advisor. Students at big schools can break the academic rules of registration if they have the determination to do so. Even though we live in an age of the Internet, the old-fashioned technique of going in to see a professor or academic counselor in person is better than sending an email because it shows the seriousness and dedication of the student. In addition, never leave questions or changes before deadlines or exams because last minute inquiries generally are answered with angry or delayed responses.

1. If you make your mark or make a mark, you do something which causes you to become noticed or famous. Today we look at the new generation of Japanese directors making their mark in world cinema.

I loved working through the chapters and learned a lot about myself and my values through the prompts. Now I try to journal every Saturday morning and find it a great way to reflect on the week that was and the goals for the week coming. A beautiful, beautiful book! Rated 5 out of 5 Kimi Anderson, TravelGiver â€” A beautiful and inspiring quality notebook, linking personal values, business aspirations and daily operations. It is very inspirational and has helped me build a lot of courage and confidence. This is definitely highly recommendable!! Rated 5 out of 5 Kylie Flynn, Happy Hemisphere â€” March 28, The notebook served as a great platform for my leadership coaching with my clients. I would give them a notebook as a gift and then worked through each trait weekly with them. This has allowed me to expand my personal growth as a leader at work. I spent most of the holidays with my nose in it. For me there is little delineation from work and play, but his book helped me address both in a way that has helped me set clear goals. Rated 5 out of 5 Cassie Magin â€” June 19, The Leaders in Heels notebook helped me to brainstorm for and provide me with the direction I needed in setting new goals and planning my next lot of achievements. Thank you for the inspiration Kasia! Rated 5 out of 5 Catherine â€” August 12, Gorgeous, inspirational notebook that I loved being seen with. The quotes are motivational and inspiring. You will love this book as much as I do. Rated 5 out of 5 Carlye â€” August 29, I think it is a lovely little notebookâ€¦. It is nice to have something beautiful AND motivating in the same little package. Our colleagues from all over the world joined this program and loved this notebook. It was a perfect match of inspiration, leadership and a feminine touch to the notebook. It made the experience extra special, as all details were thought of in this notebook. I really recommend this for individual use but also for bigger companies that are running a female leadership program. Next to being inspirational, this notebook is just amazing in quality. Everyone can order normal notebooks for their meetings or event but this one is really long lasting and worth the investment. Kasia is a wonderful lady that really helped us with organizing this and the practicalities needed to make it work in our company. Rated 5 out of 5 Gemma Hay, Banking Professional â€” November 24, Being a leader is stressful, hardwork and full on. Kindness Is the first thing I forget during these times. Make your mark reminds me of what it takes. It looks fabulous and I imagine will be a staple in my handbag from now. Thanks Kasia and Leaders in Heels for your great stationary and daily inspiration! Rated 5 out of 5 Barbara â€” September 2, Wonderful notebook â€” I got mine for my daughter who is entering college, and will get some more to give to the impressive young women who are her friends Rated 5 out of 5 Karen E â€” February 2, An inspirational tool and helps to challenge you to really think about what you want to achieve Rated 5 out of 5 Sharon Green, Advertising Manager â€” February 5, I am looking forward to Leader in Heels benefitting my productivity and purpose in and beyond. A beautiful and inspirational Christmas gift, perfect to create focus, inspiration and challenge me to achieve more in each day. Rated 5 out of 5 Priscilla â€” March 5, I am in the process of a career transition and I am at an early point in the journey. I have a career coach who is a contributing author to Leaders in Heels and my planner and notebook work perfectly to support my day to day life and my coaching sessions. I am encouraged to journal on a regular basis using my notebook and I use my planner to not only set out my weekly activities, but also consider the bigger picture. Having my goals and my core values written down is powerful. Beautiful, functional and motivational stationary. Well done Leaders in Heels! Add a review Your email address will not be published.

Getty Images Gandhi said, "The best way to find yourself is to lose yourself in the service of others. They may seem like little things, but most of us can recall a time when a seemingly little thing--a kind word, a helping hand--has made a memorable mark and a big difference. Here are some simple ideas on how you can leave your mark: Give your undivided attention. Be a problem solver. Become known as a person who has solutions and answers--or who knows where to find them. It makes them feel valued and leaves a great impression. Ask "How can I help? Just the offer communicates that you value someone. Let others always see you doing and giving your best. Make your contribution greater than your reward. Always give a little more than you get. Lead with integrity, no matter how much it costs. A smile is an invitation to connect. Compliment the person in the first 30 seconds of the conversation. Pick something specific and personal. It will make the person feel valued. Make people feel good about themselves. Acknowledge their gifts and talents. Listen is an anagram of silent. Try to listen without interrupting. As the saying goes, the eyes are the window to the soul. When something important has been accomplished, share the credit. Remember, nothing great was ever accomplished alone. Talk with people, not at them. Engage people by truly connecting with them. When you discover an article, blog post, or book that you think someone can benefit from, send it with a personal text or note. Forward information that adds value and brings benefit to others, and let them know why you thought they would find it helpful. Dream big for others. Instill a passion in them that they can be more and do more. Stay away from toxicity. Help others learn what is toxic in their lives and how to avoid it. Keep a positive attitude. Attitude is contagious, so spread only good feelings. Even a quick text is thoughtful. Use technology to help you remember. Help people focus on their strengths, not their weaknesses. Give without being asked. Always bring something to the table. Resources, ideas, opportunities--even an article or a good quote can communicate your interest and investment. Give people your trust. It is the foundation of all great relationships. Adapt your communication to fit the time, place, and person. Not everything deserves the same attention. Highlight what may be overlooked. Make a point of noticing the things that others may not notice. When you are on time, you show respect for others. Go the extra mile. Extra effort makes people feel extra good. Be a sounding board. Be available if someone wants to run ideas or think things through. Offer help when blind spots occur or new ideas are needed. Give someone a special task and watch the person accomplish it. Let people know you believe in them by making them stretch. Valuing someone goes a long way. Express deep appreciation for the ways that people add value to your life. People often have a hard time taking compliments, but acknowledging their strengths and work is a concrete way of making them feel good. Treat people the way you want to be treated. This is the most fundamental rule of being with others. Be sincere in your sincerity. Model generosity and kindness always. It makes people feel valued and empowered. Catch people doing something right. And then praise them for it or otherwise show that you noticed. Invite people to be part of a cause that is greater than they are. Invite them to dream big and play even bigger. Keep your promises and commitments. Give everything you do your best effort. There is always a way to work through a conflict. Inspire others to inspire others. Live every day like it was your last. Show that you cherish your life and those around you. Imagine what could happen if we spend our time bringing value to others--even if we do one thing on a daily basis. Remember, the smallest gesture can make a big difference and leave the deepest mark.
